Novelties in Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bratt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

EXHIBITION VARIETIES.

The shows are now over and in accordance with our usual custom for some years past, we will look over the field and see how the standard varieties hold their own compared with the new comers. We were afraid a year or two ago that Eaton and Appleton would have a monopoly of the prizes and that our shows would be monotonous from the sameness of the exhibits. That fear has certainly vanished and now we have a dozen varieties that will size up as large or larger than these two ever did. There has been a feeble wail or two heard, as usual, that the public was tired of the large blooms, but anyone that attends a representative show and takes the trouble to watch the crowds carefully and listens to their comments, will find that it's the largest blooms that come in for the greatest amount of admiration.

While there was some room for criticism anent the coarseness of Eaton and Appleton, there is none about some of the novelties, which are as perfect as flowers can be. I give here a list of varieties in their colors and will describe them in detail later.

In yellow, Thirkell, Salisbury, F. S. Vallis, General Hutton, Percy Plumridge, Appleton and Cheltoni are the best.

In pink, W. Duckham, Leila Filkins, Durban's Pride, F. A. Cobbold, Mrs. G. Mileham and A. J. Balfour.

In white, Merza, Ben Wells, Mrs. Weeks, Eaton, Chadwick and Nellie Pockett.

In red, S. T. Wright, Lord Hopetoun, Maynell, Henry Barnes and H. J. Jones.

In odd colors, Mildred Ware, Mary Inglis, W. R. Church, T. Carrington, Queen Alexandra, Harrison Dick and Brutus.

These thirty varieties will give any grower such a choice of color and form as to render him invincible on the show table if he grows them right. Last year I said that Mrs. Thirkell was the king of the yellows and the way it has been exhibited this year fully bears out that statement. Its only fault is the rather bare neck when taken on the early bud, which is the bud that produces the largest flower. General Hutton makes as large a flower, but it has a narrow line of crimson running down the side of each petal that detracts from it when exhibiting it as a yellow, though in a class of six sixes it makes a grand vase. Lord Salisbury also often comes bronzy red on a late crown and, while it will come pure yellow from an early bud, it can also be set up in the "any other" class. It is more delicate in growth than the two preceding varieties and will drop out sooner. Appleton was, as usual, very prominent, but it is no longer the only yellow, and Mrs. Thirkell will beat it in the eyes of nine judges out of ten. F. S. Vallis takes the place of yellow Carnot. It is an easy grower, comes just as large as Carnot and is much the same color. Cheltoni, the yellow sport from Nellie Pockett, will undoubtedly be largely grown for next year. It is a lovely thing, but stock is already beginning to run short. Percy Plumridge beat Yellow Eaton at New York and was very favorably commented on there. It has all the earmarks of a good thing and next year when it is sent out, will undoubtedly show up good. Yellow Eaton I have omitted to mention as an exhibition yellow because I think it is out-classed. As a matter of fact, white Eaton is also, but the white section is not at present so well filled as the yellow.

In pinks, W. Duckham is the variety of the year. It seems to have every desirable attribute. The ten flowers of this variety that won the silver cup at New York were the finest flowers in the exhibition and either as a commercial or an exhibition pink it will for years head the list. Good pinks are getting numerous now. Durban's Pride is rather pale and not much use for setting up as a long stemmed flower, but Filkins and Cobbold are both excellent, Cobbold being a particularly strong grower. Mrs. Mileham was set up very fine this year form. There seems no limit to its size in the hands of some growers.

The red section is now well enriched and in collections of twelve or twenty-five varieties they are telling colors. S. T. Wright is the king of the batch, with a glistening velvety sheen on its petals that is not seen in any other red. All of this section are now strong growers, Barnes in fact being a very tall grower, but its many virtues atone for that fault. One good grower told me that this year he had Eaton fourteen feet high, by which it can be seen that we have giants in these days. Barnes is a true Jap and shows its color to the best advantage. Maynell is the strongest grower of the lot, though its color is not so fine as Wright. It should be kept in the open sunlight to make all the petals reflex naturally.

In the odd colored class, Carrington is the only old variety, the others being mostly novelties. Mildred Ware made a grand record in England this year, and next fall, when it is disseminated generally here, it will be a popular variety. A much improved Lady Anglesey is nearest to describing it. It is a Carnot seedling and somewhat resembles that variety in the arrangements of its petals. W. R. Church has proved itself worthy of all the praise I bestowed on it last year. As set up at New York, it won the admiration of everyone. Its color is unique and telling, but I am afraid it takes an in several places, as was also A. J. Balfour. This latter is a splendid color. Its only fault is a sparsity of petals that cuts it down considerably in size.

In the white class all the varieties mentioned are well known and need no comment, save Ben Wells. This variety will rank high when known, for it is as easy a grower as Eaton, immense in size yet finely finished and gives no trouble whatever. Merza is holding out in great expert to grow it to the best advantage. It is a poor grower in the spring, being hard to get growing away from its habit of producing buds, but it richly repays the trouble taken with it. Harrison Dick will become a favorite with the store men as well as an exhibition flower. The ground color is yellow, which is thickly overlaid with red, and the effect is very pleasing. Mary Inglis is an immense, large petaled flower that seems to present limitless possibilities as to size. Its general effect is bronze though on the early bud it is almost a yellow. It seems to be very slow in producing stock and the demand this year will probably be greater than the supply.

To sum up, I would say that no year since I have been watching the exhibitions and the new varieties has there been so much interest displayed by the general public or so many good new varieties set up. The croaker will croak his usual lay about the interest waning, perhaps, but I think more exhibitions will show a balance on the right side of the ledger than for years past, and certainly it has been years since we had twelve or fifteen new varieties come out at once and show such wonderful progress and development in size and finish. It seems as if, the world over, the chrysanthemum was again on the flood tide. In France the opening of the national show was considered worthy of a special cable to the great New York dailies, and one gentleman gave an estate worth half a million francs to encourage the cultivation of the queen of autumn. What will happen if one of our billionaires lays himself out to beat that Frenchman, I shudder to contemplate. Elmer D. Smith will be getting a million dollars in return for naming some new seedling Mrs. Astorbilt, and the rest of us may be able to settle with the coal dealer for last winter's coal by growing it for the market.

BRIAN BORU.

NEW MUMS.

The accompanying illustrations show the two novelties exhibited early this season by H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill., and favorably commented on in these columns. The photographs, in our opinion, hardly do the varieties justice. The following are the originator's descriptions:

Mrs. H. W. Buckbee.—Niveus X Mrs. Henry Robinson. Pure white, slightly incurved, lower petals reflexing; growth form with lots of substance; grand stem and foliage; at its best October 20. This will make a fine commercial variety, every flower coming good. It is an easy grower and grows to about three and one-half feet from June planting. Scored 88 points before Chicago committee of the C. S. A.

TROUBLE WITH MUMS.

This is my first year with chrysanthemums. I grew about 200, flowering them in 6 and 7-inch pots. I pinched them back twice during the summer and allowed from four to six flowering stems to the plant. The plants were twice fed with bone meal and liquid manure was given seven times, at intervals of a week. I am very much disappointed at the result and do not know just what the fault is. The entire stock was rooted in April and shifted gradually at thirty-day intervals until it reached the 6 and 7-inch pots. The dwarf varieties grew from twenty-five to thirty-five inches high, making ungainly and unsalable plants. The late varieties bloomed too early and on many of the varieties the bloom was very imperfect. I would like to know the cause of my failure, also when chrysanthemums should be rooted to produce the best results, single-stemmed plants in pots and benches. When should liquid manure be used and how often? Where should stock plants be stored?

W. H. F.

It would be rather a large order to answer this letter in detail, or to tell him without seeing his plants the cause of his poor success. He does not say whether he kept his plants inside all summer or had them out in the garden. It has been almost an impossibility of late years to get any kind of plants by growing them outside, and if that has been his treatment I would certainly try them inside another year. By running four to six shoots on a 6-inch pot one cannot look for anything but small flowers. A 6-inch pots. They keep dwarf, hold their foliage and if well supplied with food make very good flowers. For "very best results," by which I assume W. H. F. means the exhibition grade of flowers, the cuttings should be rooted in March or April and planted on the benches in May. This can only be done where one has six or seven feet of head room for his plants. Feeding with liquid manure may be practiced in the case of pot plants as soon as the plants are well rooted in their final shift. For bench plants ten to twelve weeks after planting is soon enough. There is no definite rule one can follow. The condition of the plants themselves is the only true index and how to judge the condition of the plants is simply a matter of long years of experience.

The flowers that W. H. F. sees at the large exhibitions were grown by men who have devoted years of their life to the study of that one particular flower, and he cannot expect to come near that standard the first year, or the second either. The buds being imperfect may be accounted for in several ways. Insects, unless closely watched, particularly grasshoppers, will raise havoc with the buds. If the plants were allowed to get dry a few times the check thus given the plant will sometimes cause the bud to dry up and never develop. Again, if buds are taken too early in the season, say early in August, they will not develop properly. The last week in August is early enough to take buds as a general rule.

The place to keep stock plants is anywhere in a light, airy house, with the night temperature just a little above freezing. A cool, dry place is all the chrysanthemum asks for the winter. I would advise W. H. F. to look up his old papers and read the cultural notes there found from week to week. This, with his own experience and observation, will help guide him along better next year.

ED. FLORISTS' REVIEW:—Replying to your inquiry in regard to the chrysanthemum shown at New York as Dr. Engelhardt and passed upon by the New York committee as Dr. Engelhard, would report as follows: The variety was raised by Auguste Nonin, Paris, France, and is given in his list as Dr. Enguehard.

The variety was exhibited before the Cincinnati committee, a week ago, under this name as reported to you. In sending the announcement to the papers, an exact copy of the report of the New York committee was made. I have already noticed two or three different spellings of this variety, but Dr. Enguehard is the only one authorized by Nonin's list.

PIERSONI AND ANNA FOSTER.

J. W. S. asks: "Will some one tell me through the columns of the REVIEW what temperature and treatment gets the best results with Piersoni and Anna Foster ferns?"

The genus nephrolepis are all natives of the tropics. Nicholson says: "A small but widely distributed genus all natives of the tropics." N. cordifolia, better known to florists as tuberosa, is a native of Central America and so, I think, is N. exaltata, and it's from this fine species we have the form Bostoniensis and then Piersoni and Anna Foster, and there will likely be many other variations in this fine fern. It is strange to note that although N. exaltata was found and introduced as long ago as 1793, almost a century elapsed before it became the widely grown and deservedly popular plant that it now is. As it is a tropical fern, then a warm house is the place to grow it to perfection. On a recent visit to the botanic gardens in Buffalo I noticed specimens of exaltata planted out among the rocks in a warm fern house, plants that must be nine to ten feet across, with fronds at least five feet long. There this fern was at home.

In most commercial places the growing of this fern is done in the summertime, when we have, under glass, the tropical conditions. In winter, if you expect them to grow fast, you would have to give them 65 degrees at night. But if by October you have produced good sized plants, then from that on during the winter months 55 degrees will do them very well and put them in condition better suited for decorations for your customers than those taken out of a warm, moist house.

As to treatment, if you have grown Bostoniensis well, you can grow the two beautiful forms, Piersoni and Anna Foster. Some growers plant out, in five or six inches of soil, all the runners they can get and lift them when they have grown to be plants large enough for 6 or 7-inch pots. The finest plants are, I believe, better grown entirely in pots. There seems to be no particular quality or texture of soil suited or essential for these free growing ferns. A good yellow loam (not sandy), with some leaf mold and rotted manure added, would be ideal. Yet I know that such soil as you would put on your benches for tea roses will grow these ferns well. They want plenty of moisture at the roots at all times and shade only during the hottest months. Whoever saw the mother plant of N. Piersoni surrounded by her two or three dozen very small offspring in the fall of 1900 and less than eighteen months afterward saw the many grand specimens exhibited by Mr. Pierson could have little doubt of the freedom and rapid growth of the variety. W. S.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Bursting Calyxes.

Some varieties of carnations are more liable to burst than others, or rather, certain varieties possess a naturally weak calyx, and in consequence, any sudden deviation in treatment or direct violation of laws governing proper culture, shows its effect here. Any variety will burst under radically wrong treatment, so when we see it stated that a certain sort never bursts, it is reasonable to take the statement to mean that its calyx is naturally strong and if handled rightly will give no splits.

The cause of a large percentage of this trouble can be traced to temperature and generally it is a case of its being allowed to fall at a time when the buds are about to show, or are just showing, color. On the morning of a bright day the ventilators may have been raised too high in one operation or left open too long toward night. Perhaps a sudden drop in temperature outside took place during the night, or in some way the plants received a chill. The immediate effect is to retard the progress of the petals outward, toward and through the top of the calyx. Doctors of medicine would call it congestion, and so it is here, the effect being that on returning to a higher temperature the petals begin to unfold before the congestion can be relieved, resulting in the calyx giving way.

Another cause is carrying the temperature too high during cloudy or stormy weather, in which case the amount of heat employed is not attended with sufficient light to maintain the balance that should always exist between these two important agencies.

With a scarcity of bloom you would never resort to raising the night temperature 10 degrees. Why, then, on a dark day, when the thermometer should stand about 60 degrees, allow it to run up to 70 degrees or over, as I have heard related? Any attempt to force matters by using very rich food in the way of soil, top dressing heavily or strong liquid manure, will result in a crop of malformed and split blooms. The variety Eldorado is one in particular which resents liberal use of fertilizers.

Overwatering is injurious in many ways and with some varieties this error in treatment shows a marked effect on calyxes and this is especially true of those impatient of disturbance at the roots and slow in getting established after housing, notably Lawson. Could we produce a race of carnations having absolutely non-bursting calyxes, skill in the culture of carnations would become unknown, but of this there need be no fear.

The heating apparatus must be ample to resist the sudden changes of weather and under perfect control, also ventilators arranged to operate without causing draught over the plants, regardless of direction of wind. Never allow the temperature to run up too high and then put on a wide crack of air at once, but trim your sails to meet the weather. During any time of year when the outside temperature makes it necessary to close the ventilators at night, it is the watchful grower who, between the hours of seven and ten in the morning, has made several trips through the houses to manipulate the ventilators.

If you are growing acknowledged leading sorts and some are splitting badly, correspond with the originators, who will gladly supply advice. Lawson bothered most of us at the start, but Mr. Fisher put us on the right track.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

INSECTICIDES.

A correspondent writes: "Let me know what to do with carnations that are covered with green bugs and are in with other plants, such as coleus and begonias." Another says: "Kindly state in your valuable journal what insecticide you would recommend for use on carnations and roses in a house with a general stock of pot plants."

These inquiries are so near the same that one answer will apply to both. There are several tobacco preparations on the market and all are good. We have used Nicotidine with good effect and I know several large growers who use Aphis Punk and they all speak well of it. Most of these preparations seem rather expensive, but when you consider that they do the work well and at the same time do not injure the most tender plants, they are cheap in the end. The old fashioned way of burning tobacco stems will not do when you have to fumigate a house containing very tender foliage plants or delicately colored blooms, as the smoke will burn the one and take the color out of the other. If you have only carnations or roses in the house the tobacco stems will do, but be sure you cut the blooms close before you smoke and have the ventilators raised several hours before you cut again, to let the burnt tobacco odor out of the house. Carnations especially retain the odor a long time.

A. F. J. BAUR.

ROSES.

Cutting and Packing.

Care should be exercised in cutting the blooms so that the proper and most suitable eyes may be left to provide strong stems for a future crop. This operation should never be done in too hurried a manner, nor should any carelessness be tolerated, as if these most suitable eyes are removed we run the risk of getting puny wood, which, if it is not blind, is quite incapable of bearing a high grade bloom.

There is a practice also in vogue in some places which even with the most careful help often leads to the same result. I refer to the practice of cutting by lamp light during the early morning. Under such conditions it is nearly impossible for even the keenest sighted to always select the proper eye at which to cut. The disastrous consequences of such a practice can only be avoided by relegating it to the realms of innocuous desuetude.

If there was any real necessity for this practice it might even, with all its attendant evils, be tolerated, but it is surely detrimental to the best interests of the trade to pack and ship this hurriedly taken cut without giving it any other preparation but a few minutes of a dip in water.

Immediately after the cut is taken, and before the wound has had time to dry, the stems should be immersed in water at a temperature not to exceed the temperature of the house from which they were cut, nor to drop so low as 41 degrees. They should then be placed in the cold room, which should be at a temperature of from 48 to 52 degrees.

The most satisfactory results are obtained if they are allowed to remain at that temperature for ten hours before being shipped. If they have to remain any longer the water ought to be changed. After being kept in the cooler for thirty-six hours, the conscientious grower will refuse to ship them to his customers.

Year after year we have the same complaints from retailers and commission men who, during the Christmas holidays, receive large consignments of salted stock from growers not over scrupulous. The damage done to the trade by these transactions is incalculable, besides destroying the confidence and friendship which ought to exist amongst the craft.

In packing the greatest care should be taken to place each individual bloom in such a manner that the petals may not be injured nor the necks broken. A small roll of cotton batting or tissue paper should be placed under the necks of each row of buds so that the whole weight of the bud may not rest on the petals.

Always have the paper next to the buds new and clean. This gives the flowers a much fresher appearance than if newspapers or soiled paper be the material used. The wrappings should always be abundant and sufficient to withstand severe frost. By attending to these matters, which we will do if we wish for the prosperity of our customers, which is identical with our own, and not acting too hastily when a kick comes, as come it surely will, we may please our customers and have the satisfaction of a clear conscience, which is a great reward in itself.

PROPAGATING HARDY ROSES.

An appreciative reader of the REVIEW speaks in most pleasant terms of an article from this pen about propagating summer-blooming tea and other roses. To use his own phraseology would make one blush, but he continues and says: "Cannot some of your correspondents give us a good plain way to propagate hardy roses from the cutting to the field." Doubtless several correspondents could give us very accurate instructions along these lines, and the little I am going to say may bring forth the latest and best methods. If in criticism and correction to what I say, so much the better.

As is generally known, that great class of roses known as hybrid perpetuals, which we buy of American nurserymen and sometimes import, are always budded. Our own nurserymen use the Manetti stock; so do the English and Dutch, but sometimes the wild native rose. For the standard trees so much in favor in Europe and so great a failure in our northern states, the wild briar stock is always used. The budding operation is done in the field in July. It is a nurseryman's business, and if you use but a thousand or two of these roses, either for forcing or for your customers' gardens, you had better depend on buying your needs of a reliable nurseryman or a conscientious importer. Both exist.

A large proportion of the finest varieties of hybrid perpetual roses do very poorly on their own roots. I think Baroness Rothschild and Magna Charta are instances of this, while General Jacqueminot and Ulrich Brunner grow free enough on their own roots. This may seem strange, on first thought, but remember that some of the varieties that bear the finest blooms have come from the seed of parents that for years did not grow on their own roots, so it is a case of hereditary disability. Darwin in his "Plants and Animals Under Domestication" mentions that for 200 or 300 years the Scotch shepherds have so persistently cut off the tails of their dogs that at last appeared a tailless breed of dogs. This remarkable physical abbreviation was not effected in one generation, or ten, but in 200 or 300 it was, for we have seen the dogs. So the hybridist has produced a breed of roses that will not stand on their own legs, but need an artificial and vigorous support.

Those varieties of hybrid perpetual roses that grow freely on their own roots can be propagated as follows: In November, after the wood is ripe, but not too severely frozen, cut the medium-sized canes. Cut into lengths with three eyes. That is the cutting. See that the lower ends of the cuttings are all about even. Tie in bunches of twenty-five and around the base of each bunch tie a bunch of moist sphagnum moss, not wet, but just moist. Place the bunches of cuttings in flats, with moss between them, and place the flats beneath a very cool bench as far removed from any artificial heat as possible. During winter they form a callus. By the end of February or still later put each cutting in a 2-inch rose pot. This is the critical time with them. A slight bottom heat and cool top would be the ideal condition. After they have sent out roots there will be no trouble, and grown along in a night temperature of 50 degrees and gradually given plenty of air, they can be planted in the open ground after all danger of frost is past. When the cutting is fast breaking into growth they should not be exposed to any cold draughts.

These roses can also be propagated in the same way as many of our hardy shrubs: that is, in a hotbed in July with two or three inches of soil over the manure and three inches of sand on that, keeping the glass heavily shaded for the first two weeks and gradually giving air and light. The condition of the cutting is of most importance with this method, as it is with a deutzia or weigelia. You want the young, green growth, but it should not be the very tender tops or the too ripened growth.

The Ramblers are propagated from medium-sized growth taken in October, when the leaf and stem are yet untouched by frost. Cut into two or three eyes and put into the sand on any ordinary bench. A little bottom heat will help, but the atmosphere should be cool. Yet a very sure way with the Ramblers is to rob the plants you are forcing for Easter of the young, flowerless growths and put into the sand and treat just as you would your cuttings of tea roses.

To revert again to H. P. roses, American Beauty is a hybrid perpetual, and we all know that this all important rose is propagated by the million in February, March and April, from the blind shoots, when the growth is neither too matured nor too succulent, and the H. P.'s would propagate just the same, but I will say again in conclusion, you had better leave the propagation of the hardy roses to the nurserymen and attend to your knitting in more important lines of your florist business. COOK'S NEW ROSES.

The photographs herewith reproduced show the seedling roses which John Cook, of Baltimore, exhibited at the New York exhibition. The following descriptions are given:

No. 115 is the largest and purest white rose under cultivation; tea fragrance; stiff, erect stems; a seedling of Alice Furon crossed with Baltimore.

No. 150 is a cardinal red, a stronger grower than any red rose grown under glass; flower large, with ten to fifteen more petals than Liberty; deliciously fragrant; a cross between Liberty and an unnamed seedling raised by Mr. Cook.

THE HEATHER.

Alexander Wallace has given us the first complete work on the heather (The Heather in Love, Lyric and Lay, published by the A. T. De La Mare Co.), although the literature of many centuries abounds with references to the flower which stands for Scotland's sentiment, and many authors have sought to wield its magic power by incorporating it in the titles of books in no sense relating to the heather. Mr. Wallace, who is a widely read Scotchman, writes in his preface that he has endeavored "to cull from the many references to the heather abounding in Scottish and other literature, and to weave the sprays thus gathered into a literary garland, the beauty and attractiveness of which shall lie in the depth of the sentiment pervading it and in the aroma of patriotic love that it exhales." The result is a volume certain to find a cozy corner in the regard of every one who loves Scotland and things Scottish. The book is of 245 pages, neatly printed and fully illustrated. It will be sent postpaid to anyone forwarding $1.50 to the REVIEW.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—Miss C. B. Flick has been having a very successful flower show at her store.

SYLVANIA, O.—The Cushman Gladiolus Co. has just finished a harvest of the best bulbs it has ever grown.

ALBANY, N. Y.—E. L. Menand has put up one of Hitchings & Co.'s latest iron-frame greenhouses 30x200.

MONTICELLO, ILL.—S. W. Allerton is building a large greenhouse as an addition to his private range.

HYDRANGEAS FOR FORCING.

J. J. asks for an answer in the REVIEW to the following: He says he has some hydrangeas, Thomas Hogg and Otaksa, three and four years old, very much root bound. They grew tall last summer outside but did not flower after one night's frost. He has cut them down to within ten or twelve inches of the pot and laid them under a bench in a cool house. He would like some in flower for Easter and some for Decoration day.

Plants that are three and four years old, if they have done at all well should need a larger pot than a 7 or 8-inch. A year-old plant, one propagated last February, would be much better for forcing. In cutting the Otaksa back so hard you have cut away the buds that would give you the flowers. I would try but a few of either sort for Easter. Keeping them at rest in a cool house is correct, but it should be very cool, and only water enough to keep the wood from shriveling. Start them growing about the first of March. As they would be dormant you can shake off what soil will come off and give them a larger pot. I don't think you will have success with these plants for Easter bloom, but treated as above they may be all right for Decoration day. If you try a few for Easter you would, of course, have to start them growing in heat at New Year's. W. S.

too warm. This business gradually grew on us till we had to build a frame structure, with plenty of big windows for light, and run two hot water pipes around it, to keep out frost. A few degrees of frost would do no harm to the sweet bays, but we have in this shed also a large Hydrangea Otaksa and a few oleanders. So we try and keep the frost out, and no more. We do not cater to this trade of storing these plants for the winter; quite the contrary, but circumstances arise when you can't get out of it. Make it pay, and then there are no tears. Hydrangeas are deciduous and when resting in winter want little water. Sweet bays and oleanders are evergreen and should never be allowed to get dust dry. Of all abominations is the old woman's oleander. She has great reverence for the old thing but does not want to pay much for its preservation. In fact she would take a $5 bill for one in a 20-inch tub and eight feet high, only, "I hate to part with it because my mother raised this tree from a slip that an old lady owned in New Jersey and Gen. La Fayette picked a blossom off that very tree and wore it on his coat."

Forcing Bulbs.

The Paper White narcissus, if it pays to grow at all, pays best at the holidays. In fact, I never knew us to have too much at that season. If it is showing white now, it is not too early but it should have a light bench and not over 50 degrees at night. When this bulb is forced in strong heat it is a poor thing, but in a cool house and the flowers fully expanded it is very useful.

Roman hyacinths force very easily at this time of year. When about to open their bells they, too, are of much better quality if given a house about 55 degrees at night, and light.

We used to think it very necessary and very grand to have tulips at Christmas. They are not wanted at that season. Dué Van Thol is the only variety that will force so early without extraordinary heat, and then it's not worth while. Leave your La Reine, Vermilion Brilliant and Yellow Prince and daffodils outside making roots till New Year's, when if brought in you can with proper treatment be sure of fine, long-stemmed flowers.

Allow twenty days for your cold storage crop of valley to be in good order for Christmas. Six-inch pans of valley in fine bloom are in good demand for a holiday gift. If they are fully matured a few days ahead, so much the better. At this time of year you can use your valley forcing bed for the present crops. The atmosphere is cool and a little bottom heat won't hurt.

As the chrysanthemum benches are emptied you will have room to bring in the Japan lilies; not that you should begin to force them in too high a heat; 45 to 50 degrees at night will do very well till New Year's, and then begin to give them a strong heat. Last year our Japan lilies were all in by Easter, and some days to spare, but many were too dwarf and we would rather blame ourselves than the quality of the bulbs. We think it was largely due to giving them a strong heat before there were much roots.

Christmas Plants.

The most interesting work in the greenhouse now is getting your Christmas stock in proper shape. We see no signs of the Christmas gift taking other than the form of a pretty plant, as for the past

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Covering Pansies.

We have had a touch of winter and may soon expect the real, strenuous article and it's a great comfort to know that everything is snug and in its winter quarters, safe and protected. Here are a few reminders.

If you grow pansies in the open field and they should be covered with snow the greater part of the winter, they will come out in the spring in good order, but if we are not blessed with snow they will freeze and then heave out of the ground and you will lose many. Hemlock boughs make the finest covering. There is always a bow or arch to these branches which prevents them lying heavily on the little plants. If you are not in the hemlock belt, then branches of the white pine will do and if you are on the prairie, where neither of these noble trees grow, then rye straw laid between the rows and very lightly over the plants will do, but the evergreen branches are better.

Hardy Roses and Shrubs.

If you made a planting of hardy roses for yourself or your patrons last spring and they have made a growth of three or four feet, don't indulge in the nonsense of strawing them up; just cut off a foot or so of the longest growths and tie the shoots together and put six inches of stable litter or leaves on the ground between the plants. That is of the greatest benefit. Trying to preserve the tops is folly, because if killed down to within six inches of the ground is of no consequence. You would prune them down as low as that anyway next April.

Snow is a great protector of our herbaceous plants. Some species would perish if it were not for their natural protecting mantle. Yet with us we get "the beautiful" in such sudden and copious doses that it frequently breaks down the branches of the deciduous shrubs. I have seen the branches of Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora badly crushed; also many other shrubs. We get called to "come and tie up the shrubs" for our customers. Tying the growths up compactly is well worth doing, but strawing them up like a bale of trees is nonsense, unless you want to find work for your men and make a bill.

Protecting Bulbs.

Don't be in a hurry to cover the tulip and hyacinth beds that are to look so gay next May. Frost will not hurt them; it is toward spring that the alternate freezing and thawing heaves the bulbs to the surface. If they have three inches of stable litter on them by New Year's, it will be in plenty of time. Your own flats of these bulbs that are now outdoors, covered with three or four inches of soil, should be allowed to freeze just an inch or so and then covered with six inches of long stable manure. Leaves would be excellent but it's a trouble to keep them in place. So long as the soil in the flats is not frozen these bulbs are making roots, but if you cover too early and keep too warm the tulips that you don't want till March will have shot up like small yellow snakes standing on their tails and are never worth much for any purpose. I always want the Dutch hyacinths in 4-inch pots, or a number in 7 or 8-inch pans, to be in a frame and, besides the covering of litter or leaves, covered with sash or shutters. As you are continually getting out a few of these you don't want them frozen hard, or any great difficulty in getting them out.

I meant earlier in these notes, while on the subject of protecting shrubs, to say that our herbaceous plants are often treated shabbily. Perhaps not all but many of our most familiar herbaceous plants are found naturally growing beneath the shelter of larger vegetation, where leaves have fallen for years or even their own dying foliage has accumulated. We forget this and clean up the tops for tidiness' sake and leave them exposed in a bare field, so two or three inches of stable manure thrown over their crowns is of the greatest benefit, and particularly to those you have planted last spring or this fall.

The Storage House.

Nothing up to date has in the least hurt our sweet bay trees in tubs but now they should be in their winter quarters. Of late it has been quite a business, this storing sweet bays for our customers. A greenhouse is no place for them. In the first place you cannot afford it, and it is few years. The days of stiff, formal tying of plants is past, but some do need support and it should be done early, so that there is time for the plants to outgrow the stiffness. The Lorraine begonia will need a few tiny sticks to support its slender and flower laden growths, but neither sticks nor threads should be visible. Poinsettias in 6-inch pots will want a stake. They will need it when sold, so do it now. Azaleas will not all come into flower just right. Deutsche Perle is easily gotten out by Christmas, while Simon Mardner and Vervaeneana may want a very high temperature. Be sure and give these forced azaleas plenty of water at the roots and at least one good spraying every day till the flowers are open. That useful, cheap flower, the sweet stevia, is often past its best at the holidays if kept warm. Anything above freezing will do for it. And if you grow that subdued-colored but beautiful orchid, Cypripedium insigne, you can remove the plants to a cool house without doing any harm to the plants and the flowers will hang on in perfect condition for five or six weeks.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

FORCING RHODODENDRONS.

During the spring months there are few more showy plants than a well handled specimen of rhododendron. In florists' show windows few plants will attract more genuine interest, and if the proper methods of forcing are followed they can be sold at a reasonable price with a fair margin of profit. Specimens of these for Easter trade are much more in evidence in the eastern markets than they are in the west.

The kinds most in demand for forcing, as they are the easiest to handle and embrace all the colors of the other species, are hybrids of R. ponticum. These can be raised from seed or cuttings, but the general method of propagation is by grafting, using the ponticum as a stock. By this method a larger plant can be produced in shorter time. A large proportion of the plants used for forcing are imported annually. These are mostly the products of French and Belgian nurseries, but many of the finest and best grown are from England.

As soon as they arrive they should be unpacked and the balls immersed in water and potted as soon as the balls have drained. They require very little pot room, and as the roots are very fine, the compost must be finely pulverized. The compost most suitable is composed of one part peat soil and one part composed of equal proportions of leaf mold, good loam soil and sand, well incorporated.

When potting the soil must be rammed firmly around the ball, and as they require copious supplies of water during the growing and flowering season they must be provided with ample drainage. Care must be taken that the soil contains no lime or chalk, as the use of this class of soil is surely fatal, and if there is the least suspicion of lime in the water it is safer to use only rain water, both for the roots and for syringing.

After they are potted, in order that they may retain their foliage in all its freshness and to prevent them shedding their buds they should be placed in a house where they can have plenty of fresh air in a temperature of 40 degrees, with a partial shade during the brightest part of the day. They will require very little water while they are in this temperature and should not be syringed. By February the temperature should be gradually increased, raising it 5 degrees each week till it reaches 58 or 60 degrees. At this temperature the buds will develop more perfectly and the flowers have more intensity of color than if subjected to greater heat.

As soon as they are subjected to this rise in temperature they must have abundance of water, increasing the supply with each rise of temperature, and should be syringed at least once a day, and giving them all the sunshine possible.

The most frequent cause of failure in forcing rhododendrons lies in the poor class of stock which many of the growers ship to this country. Their main object seems to be to ship old, naked stock, if there are only buds enough. These plants are frequently old, hard and stunted, and in shape are anything but handsome. Another cause of failure is in bringing them into heat too soon, causing them to shed their buds.

Some varieties of our own home grown hardy R. Catawbiense hybrids when properly handled, make handsome specimens though they are a little harder to force. These should be lifted from the ground during November, before the heavy frosts begin, and should be potted at once. The same course of treatment as that accorded the ponticum hybrids usually results in success.

Another class of rhododendrons, the true greenhouse species, also deserves attention, as they are handsome free bloomers, very fragrant, easily grown, and can with proper care and selection be had in flower almost any month of the year. Among the species R. Edgeworthii, R. ciliatum and R. Nuttallii are the most popular. There are also some beautiful hybrids between these and R. Javanicum, and R. jasminiflorum, but they as a rule require hothouse treatment and are not so satisfactory.

R. hirsutum and R. ferrugineum can also be made to flower inside, but they are very impatient of heat. When successfully handled they form some of the prettiest subjects that could be wished for. I may say, however, that they are frequently entire failures in the greenhouse.

There is little doubt but that the demand for this class of stock, and other flowering shrubs, will continue to increase, and the progressive grower will, by careful study and experiment with such subjects, keep himself abreast of the times, and be ready to fill the demand when called on.

The Market.

The cold weather arrived on schedule time. The market for securities became optimistic and cut flower prices began to improve as I predicted a week ago. The horse show doubtless exerted a favorable influence also and now begins the opera season and society settles down to its long period of balls and parties.

The retailer already feels the benefit of normal conditions and with a shortage in first-class roses and carnations the wholesale sky takes on a more cheerful aspect. Thanksgiving will maintain present values throughout the week and then we must expect, as usual, a couple of dull weeks before the steady trade of the winter begins.

Violets are grown in such enormous quantities that the abnormal prices of other years can hardly be expected again. So great were the receipts of violets last week that even the street merchants were offering them, a condition never before experienced during horse show week. Some houses are handling nearly 50,000 daily.

Grand chrysanthemums are still arriving in large quantities and the novelties bring readily $4 to $5 a dozen. Some of the finest flowers of the season graced the Broadway and Fifth avenue bouillon stores on Monday. Beauties were scarce and in demand early in the week, the best touching 40 cents occasionally. Queen of Edgely is still popular and is again in the market.

Various Notes.

The National Florists' Board of Trade seems to be growing rapidly in favor with the wholesale trade. Its system is unusually prompt and liberal and its necessity seems to be fully demonstrated.

Last Tuesday Mr. Elliott was called to serve his country in jury duty and John Bernie wielded the gavel with commendable skill and success. The plant auctions will probably cease for the season on Friday next, after a season of unusual success, Mr. Elliott having the entire field under cultivation. It was a "cinch" and as a result William wears the "smile that won't come off."

J. J. Perkins has sublet his branch store at 48 West Thirtieth street to Peter Brown, a well known son of sunny Greece, where he is conducting an aggressive retail business. R. W. Perkins is now about recovered from his long and dangerous illness.

With holly in the market one begins to realize that Christmas is only four weeks distant. There will be an abundance of flowering plants ready for the occasion and everybody is optimistic as to the holiday trade and laying plans with an expectation of the greatest Christmas in the city's history.

Young & Nugent have leased the entire building at 42 West Twenty-eighth street, and that the enterprise was an inspiration is demonstrated, Mr. Nugent says, by the fact that every room in the four stories is already rented.

The American Institute granted John Scott a diploma for his new fern, Scottii, exhibited at the chrysanthemum show.

The fern and palm business among the retailers has been away below the average this year to date, notwithstanding the quantities of Piersoni and Anna Foster that decorate the windows. In fact, the plant trade has hardly begun, except on Bostons, which seem to be as popular as ever. Some very pretty novelties in baskets of flowers are to be seen in the retail windows, a sign of the unique creations which are still out of sight, but ready for their debut just before the holidays, as usual.

The Ozone Park Nurseries, at Ozone Park, L. I., are planning to erect a large storage shed to take care of a large stock of roses which they are just starting to dig. They have received a large shipment of box trees and rhododendrons.

Alfred Chasseaud, manager of the Herald Square exhibition hall, where the great 'mum show was held, announces the renting of the whole space to growers in and around New York for the exhibition and sale of blooming plants during the week before Christmas if present plans are consummated.

The ribbon men are placing "original conceptions," as they call them, for the florists under consideration again this fall. Lion & Wertheimer's latest novelties are violet ties, handkerchiefs and tasseled scarfs, all very handsome and popular.

The supply houses have been overwhelmed with business this season. To talk with the proprietors one cannot fail to believe in the stability and growth of the florists' business generally. To particularize seems unnecessary. I have yet to talk with a florists' supply house or a bulb house that is not more than satisfied with the season's business.

A notable dinner will be that given the football players at the Princeton Inn tomorrow evening. The entire decorations are autumn leaves and yellow chrysanthemums. The work is in the hands of Thos. Young, Jr.

Another edition of "How to Grow Violets" is being prepared by the author, Geo. Saltford, of West Twenty-ninth street, the demand having completely exhausted the second edition. Perhaps this book has had considerable to do with the enormous output of this flower from up the Hudson, where violet growers are legion and increasing by the score every year. A fair estimate of the number of violets to arrive between this and Easter in the New York market is said by an expert to be easily fifty millions.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

A week of very sharp weather has shortened up the supply of flowers of all kinds and prices have, of course, risen accordingly. Thanksgiving is going to clear out most all the chrysanthemums. So gorgeously they came in with October's lovely days; how tawdry like their exit! A bench of chrysanthemum stumps with a few dozen cripples left dangling about is a depressing sight and it is a relief to see the bench filled with another crop. Still we are studying how many of the wonderful new varieties we will buy, and can almost see a few thousand wonderful prize buds in September, 1904. Those who thought the chrysanthemums' popularity would die out after a few years were mistaken. From my limited vision this year they have been in rather better demand and for fine flowers a better price has been paid than for several years. Roses have greatly shortened up, but quality is getting near the mark. Wise Bros., and Wm. Stroh, of Attica, are sending in fine Imperial violets. C. F.

Christensen has still some fine benches of Maud Dean and Lincoln 'mums and getting his own price for them. His mignonette is again in great form and so are his Marquis, Prosperity and Crane carnations.

Various Notes.

It is reported that Joseph R. Restock has bought the house and land of the late Mr. Smiley, at Lancaster. Joseph will soon have his hands full, with his Elmwood avenue, Red Rock and Lancaster interests, but since his left hind leg is itself again he is ready for anything.

I don't think I have made any comment since election on the effect of defeat on the physical and mental condition of Wm. F. Kasting. The whole democratic ticket was snowed under, but Billy ran 3,000 ahead of the leader of the ticket and in consequence his spirits have been in a state of effervescence ever since and he has gained thirteen and one-half pounds and a hat one-eighth of an inch smaller fits him and he is a very busy man.

Very few visitors of late, and of those we only heard. That brilliant young antipodean, Mr. McHutchison, was here and I am very sorry to have missed Mr. Roney, manager of the twelve-acre Lake View establishment at Jamestown. Twelve acres of glass, and yet Mr. Roney was making contracts with growers in the neighborhood. What an outlet this big place must have.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Receipts have not been unusually large this week, but ample to meet the requirements of the Thanksgiving demand. Beauties have been among the most plentiful items and there are reports of some concession on large lots from quotations on the extra lengths. Good Brides and Bridesmaids were very scarce, and there is record of sales of small lots of choice stock at prices well above quoted rates, but nine-tenths of the material was of a character not suited to the shipping trade and realized very low figures. Chatenay was one of the most plentiful of roses and sold very well. Carnations were estimated by a number of the wholesalers to have been in not more than half the quantity received in this market for Thanksgiving a year ago, and prices, therefore, were well maintained up to Tuesday night; 2 and 3 cents has been readily paid for ordinary stock, with fancies at 4 cents, and some special stock, like Enchantress, going much higher. Good violets have been in demand and prices satisfactory. The supply of chrysanthemums was considerably above what had been anticipated, and only slight advances in price were possible. There was a very good demand for the smaller stock, and it was in this particular that the market was the shortest, most of the receipts running to the better quality of goods.

There was as usual more or less evidence of pickled stock and, of course, much stock was received too late to supply the demand, for the growers seem never to learn that the principal demand comes the second day before the holiday. The wholesalers sum up the situation by estimating the trade as at least 25 per cent less than a year ago, but the market was fairly well cleaned out at the end on all salable material. A noteworthy feature was that the buyers were reluctant to place advance orders, not seeming to know what their requirements were likely to be.

Various Notes.

John P. Risch reports all preparations complete for the Florists' Club's third annual ball at the Masonic Temple next Wednesday evening. Tickets have been widely distributed and are reported selling well. A complete success seems assured for the evening's entertainment.

E. C. Amling reports that cattleyas have been very scarce and of indifferent quality, but he is now getting some very good stock from one of the large eastern growers.

N. J. Wietor reports sales of Enchantress carnations at 8 cents this week. Unfortunately, the supply of this grade of stock was not great.

Geo. Reinberg had a heavy cut for Thanksgiving, with many Beauties. He now has carnation cuttings rooted ready to ship.

Sinner Bros. are handling Reed & Keller's Christmas bells and report a good demand.

It is reported that a horse and wagon belonging to the Chicago Carnation Co. was stolen from the street at Joliet last Saturday night. The wagon contained all the provisions for the company's employees for the week.

John Zeck, at J. A. Budlong's, says this has been the biggest Thanksgiving in their history, but they had plenty of stock to fill orders.

Recent reports from the green district in Wisconsin indicate that picking has ceased in many localities because of snow and cold weather. One well known handler of green reports that he has never known, in more than twenty years' experience, the time when any considerable quantity was picked after as hard a freeze as that of last week. Very little green has as yet reached this market, and none whatever outside of legitimate channels. There is record of sales of $6 and $7 per 100 pounds.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting some very well grown Mrs. Jerome Jones.

L. Coatsworth is at New Castle for a few days' outing.

Kennicott Bros. have had some very choice Chadwick mums this week, but E. E. Pieser says it was a tough proposition to get an extra 50 cents a dozen out of them on account of the unusual quality. The sorts that were wanted were the kind that wholesale at from $5 to $8 per hundred.

A. Lange says his mail order business is growing steadily and serves to keep him going when local trade is light.

There were some fine floral pieces at the opening of the new Iroquois theater Monday night.

A. L. Randall is incorporating to facilitate giving his associates an interest in the business.

Albert Oelschig, son of A. C. Oelschig, of Savannah, Ga., who has been for some months past with the Geo. Wittbold Co., has gone to Cleveland, to gain additional experience with the J. M. Gasser Company.

Among the week's visitors were B.

Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; Carl Hirsch, Hillsdale, Mich.; M. F. Kyle, Kalamazoo, Mich.; A. Siegel, St. Louis, Mo.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

A complete change came over the cut flower market at the close of last week and by Saturday night there was really no presentable stuff to be had in town, a most extraordinary thing after the long period of over-production. This welcome change was due partly to the rapidity with which icicles followed Indian summer, and partly to the rapidity with which the social wheel is revolving, though not as yet startling. The rose growers, being closer to the city, were much quicker to grasp the situation than their more distant brethren, who grow carnations. The latter flower became extremely scarce and from present appearances will continue so until after Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemums are very plentiful. There seems no probability that this week will anywhere near finish them. Prices have advanced on nearly all choice stock, with likelihood of their going higher in the next few days. They are, however, lower in many cases than at this time last year. Easter lilies are now offered in quantities, the Larchmont Nurseries shipping them regularly to S. S. Pennock. Paper Whites have also made their appearance, but Romans are overdue.

The Business Outlook.

Considerable apprehension has been felt that the season now commencing would prove a poor one. The depression in securities and real estate will, it is argued, have a very serious effect on our business. As evidence of this it is pointed out that the month of November is far behind the same month last year. While all this is true, there seems good reason to believe that we are about to experience a very fair season. General business, outside of stocks and real estate, is excellent and the wealth and population of this city and those adjacent to it are so rapidly increasing that active demand seems assured. The willingness shown by the department stores to spend money on flowers and plants and the speed with which quantities of stock have lately been marketed bear out this belief.

Decorative Plants.

The shipping season for foliage plants, is about over. December usually brings considerable local demand and a few orders from out of town points. The quantities of palms sold have been larger than ever before and while there are probably also more left than in the past, few of them are large plants. The features of the season have been the decided preference shown for kentias over arecas, more marked even than in the past. The distribution of the golden pandanus, now scattered pretty thoroughly over the entire country, the advent of the Pierson fern, warmly welcomed in this city, and the great auction sale, the first of the its kind ever held in this city, were notable. There are other points of special interest: The making up in 10-inch pots of Dracaena terminalis, so cleverly executed by Lemuel Ball; the reawakening of general interest in Pandanus Veitchii, deserving of more favor as a house plant when grown cool and kept dry; the appearance of the new Ficus pandurata at Robert Craig & Son's, and the immense sale of small ferns in flats.

Notes.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had some very large orders a few days ago. They used a great many cattleyas and lilies of the valley, 500 Cypripedium insigne and a thousand bunches of single violets.

Wm. A. Walton, of Oxford, Pa., has lately purchased an automobile, an encouraging sign for the flower market supporters.

Edward Reid has had some good shipping orders lately. He stated that one box went all the way to Valley City, N. D.

Pennock Brothers have been taking most of the fancy heliotrope that Dunn & Co. are handling. This is a really wonderful thing, large fragrant clusters of flowers borne on stems fully three feet long. It reflects great credit on the grower, Arthur Mallon, Jr.

Now that Pandanus Sanderi is becoming less plentiful at Riverton, James T. Clark has redoubled his vigilance; not even the vestige of a cutting escapes his watchful eye.

Leo Niessen is receiving some splendid Liberties from A. Farenwald; his stock promises to be very fine throughout December.

The Market.

During the past week the market remained much the same as previously reported, though funeral work was more plentiful. A slight improvement is noticed today (Monday) owing to the approach of Thanksgiving and we are hopeful that the business will continue good from now on. The supply is still large and plenty of good stock is obtainable at all the wholesale houses. Prices are up a few notches this week on all grades of stock. American Beauties have already reached $4 to $6 per dozen for special selection, but $3 is the average price for the good grades. Brides and Maids are in good supply and fancy stock figures from $5 to $8 per 100, while $3 and $4 buys fair stock. Carnot, Meteor, Golden Gate and Ivory are selling well this week and fancy stock is up to $10 per 100 on these. Perle and Sunset are $4 and $5 per 100.

Carnations are cleaning up pretty well this week and some very fine stock is in the market of Joost, Flora Hill, Crocker, Estelle, Lawson and Prosperity; $3 and $4 is asked for the fancy and down as low as $1 for short stock. Prices on these may be a little higher by Wednesday. The supply of chrysanthemums is still large, though not as many of the fancy sorts. The best of them run from $2 to $3 per dozen. Eaton, Appleton, Bonaffon and Jones are the leading varieties that have the call. Small Ivory are in demand for funeral work. These sell at $3 per 100 and not enough are in for the demand.

Violets are moving lively and are cleaned up every day. Prices this week are 75 cents to $1 per 100 for the best and lots more could be used than come in. Romans are in this week, also Paper White narcissi, but in small quantities as yet, and are selling from $2 to $3 per 100. Stevia in bunches of twenty-five go at 35 cents per bunch. A little bouvardia is in but not enough to quote prices. Plenty of greens of all kinds are to be had this week, though fancy ferns were a little scarce the first part of the week. Prices run as usual.

Various Notes.

Martin Reukauf, who is selling for H. Bayersdorfer & Co., was with us this week, talking holiday supplies to the trade.

E. W. Guy, at Belleville, suffered quite a loss the past week. One of the boilers gave out and frost did much damage to his roses, carnations and other stock, which was in the best possible shape for the holidays. This bad luck is much regretted by Mr. Guy's many St. Louis friends.

Theodore Klockenkemper is still cutting some fancy chrysanthemums at his place in North St. Louis. "Klock" is also sending in a lot of well grown carnations.

William Winter, in Kirkwood, is in the market with a fine lot of carnations and violets, which are selling well at Berning's.

William Hutchinson, of Kirkwood, had a fine lot of Eaton chrysanthemums the past week, which sold out clean at Ellis'.

At Kuehn's a fancy lot of roses, carnations and chrysanthemums are seen from Ammann, Vesey and Baer.

Club Meeting.

At the next club meeting, on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 10, the new Breitmeyer rose will be on exhibition and the members will have a chance to name it. This attraction alone should bring out a large attendance. With this ex-President Dunford will read an essay on "Stem Rot," which should be of great interest to all our carnation growers, and Col. Max Herzog will lead a discussion on heating greenhouses, which is also of great importance. The president expects a full attendance and especially the chairmen of the different committees.

Bowling.

The bowling club played its usual practice games on Monday night, with only seven members present, and some good bowling was done by Kuehn and Miller.

LILIES ON BENCH.

I should like to know if Harrisii and longiflorum lilies can be grown with good success, started in 4 and 5-inch pots, then planted on a bench in five or six inches of soil?
C. A. M.

Yes, most decidedly you can plant out Harrisii or the Japan longiflorum on a bench. There would be no need of starting them in any larger pots than 4-inch and five inches of soil would be more than enough on the bench. Four inches of soil would do just as well. There is a great advantage in starting them in small pots, because then, before planting them on the bench, you can select the strongest and earliest for one batch and the next strongest for another, and so on, as well as discard all those diseased, stunts, misfits and those suffering from "general debility."

LOUISVILLE, KY.

We have had quite a little winter here for several days, the thermometer going down as low as 15 degrees, but it is turning somewhat warmer. Business all along the line the past week has been all that could be expected; lots of good chrysanthemums to be had.

Jacob Schulz gave a very fine chrysanthemum show at his store on Fourth avenue, November 18 to 21. The interior of the store was decorated with some very large bay trees and palms and ferns, which made the place look very fine. In the rear of the store, in his greenhouse, was the show of cut chrysanthemums, which were grand. His Yellow Eatons were sure enough extras, some measuring six inches across. The Jerome Jones, Chadwick and Mrs. Perrin were very fine, but what attracted the most attention were the Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. The plants were growing in 6 and 7-inch pots. To top it off his roses, such as Sunrise and Mme. Chatenay, were wonders to everybody. There were also fine blooms of carnations, Enchantress, Adonis, Nelson, Lawson and Prosperity. A vase of handsome sweet peas was also shown. It was a successful show.

Jos. Coenen & Co. have as fine a bench of Mrs. Lawson carnations as can be seen anywhere around here. Their palms and ferns are all in good shape for Christmas. It takes John Bohrmann and Mike Bell to handle them.

Wm. Mann, the good old lily king, out in the southern part of town, is always busy when you call on him, but he always has a good word for you.

Fred Haupt's store is very attractive. His show windows are always done up in fine style. His new delivery wagon is a beauty; you may call it the American Beauty.

Wm. Walker, the good old smiling Scotchman, always has a kind word for the writer when he calls on him. His Bride roses and chrysanthemums are very fine.

Hy. Fuchs has made quite an improvement in his houses and now has his place in fine shape.

The writer made a visit to Nanz & Neuner, at St. Mathews, and took a stroll through the different greenhouses and found everything in apple pie order. Geo. Reneisen took me through the American Beauty house, which was in fine shape, with a heavy crop in sight for Christmas. The carnation houses were all that could be desired, healthy plants and lots of buds. George is taken with Enchantress. Their chrysanthemums were very fine this season.

Ed Heitz's place, opposite St. Louis cemetery, is in fine shape. His roses are all looking fine.

C. H. Kunzman, the carnation king of this city, is jubilant over the crop of carnations which he will cut for Christmas.
H. L.

MARION, IND.—F. W. Herleman has built a propagating house 6x100 and extended his boiler room fifty feet. He is now getting ready to erect a carnation house 18x100.

GALENA, ILL.—Ben Vandervate is always pushing for trade. Now it is a successful chrysanthemum show he has been holding in a down-town store.

CAIRO, ILL.—Wm. Davidson has moved his flower store to the Lampert building on Eighth street, where he has a nicely fitted up place.

GARDENING UNDER GLASS

RHUBARB FORCING.

As with many other subjects used for forcing, one of the first essential conditions in rhubarb is to have the roots subjected to freezing before placing them in the forcing quarters. At the present time the frost is not likely to be strong enough to penetrate so deep as to give the desired results, but the roots can be thrown out on the surface of the ground and subjected there to 10 or 15 degrees of frost without hurt. It is well to watch the temperature closely when the roots are exposed like this, and if there is a likelihood of it running more than 15 degrees below the freezing point, to be prepared to cover the roots with loose litter and prevent their being damaged.

Wherever the forcing is to be done, the place should be darkened. This darkening not only hastens growth but renders the product much more tender. A mushroom house is the ideal place for forcing rhubarb, but it can be done under greenhouse benches by shading with curtains of burlap or some such material, though as a rule the space under the greenhouse benches does not allow head room enough. It should have space enough from the top of the crowns to allow the stalks to attain a length of at least two feet.

The roots should be lifted with enough soil adhering so that no other covering will be necessary. Then the clumps can be packed as closely together as they will stand. We put them up in rows about three feet wide, leaving space between the rows for a passageway for watering and gathering.

A plentiful supply of water is necessary, and if it can be given about the same temperature as that of the house, so much the better. After growth is well started frequent waterings with weak liquid manure will help to strengthen the stalks. Atmospheric moisture is necessary to keep the stalks crisp; a dry heat tends to make the product tough and tasteless. Our experience is that a temperature of 55 degrees is, all things considered, the best. Growth will be quicker at a higher temperature, but quality is apt to be sacrificed, where at a much lower temperature growth would be too slow to be profitable.

PROPAGATING THE POTATO.

I saw a note in a recent issue of the REVIEW about propagating the potato and will give you my experience in raising the New Gold Coin potato. I got one pound of the tubers about March 1, 1903, and put them in a box in the greenhouse. When sprouted about two inches I took the sprouts out and put them in pots. When about four inches high I cut the tops off three or four leaves above the soil. These cuttings I potted in a compost of equal parts sand and soil. Nearly every one rooted and when four or five inches high I took the tops off as before. This was continued until I had 465 plants from the one pound of tubers. These were set in the field at the proper time and about September 20 I dug 934 pounds of potatoes. Had I left them in the ground another thirty days I would have had 100 to 200 pounds more, for many of the tubers were not fully matured.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville Tenn.; Vice-Pres. F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

HENRY L. SLOSSON, the retired nurseryman, of Geneva, N. Y., died November 16, aged 61 years.

THE shipping season was a short one with the Oregon nurserymen, but there was a good growth in business.

C. G. MOZINGO, nurseryman, Nacogdoches, Tex., has filed a petition in bankruptcy; liabilities between $20,000 and $25,000.

M. J. WRAGG, of Waukegan, Ia., has returned from a two weeks' visit to nurseries in the south, including Alabama, Georgia and Oklahoma.

J. L. INCE is in charge of Stark Bros.' interests at Portland, N. Y., where their business is developing rapidly. They are introducing the Hicks grape to New York growers.

THE nursery business in the south is making a steady growth. Peach trees are still the largest item but nut trees are now staple stock and many other specialties are assuming important positions in the list.

THE Minnesota State Horticultural Society meets at Minneapolis, December 1 to 4, and there is expected to be keen interest in the Minnesota seedling apple "as hardy and prolific as the Duchess, with fruit equal to the Wealthy in size, quality and appearance, and that will keep as well as the Malinda," for which $1,000 is offered as a premium.

THE state of Washington is doing all it can to interfere with the sale in that state of nursery stock grown elsewhere. State Horticultural Commissioner A. Van Holderbelse has just rendered a decision in the case of the Portland Seed Co., that a catalogue sent by mail is an "agent" and as such brings the sender under the provisions of the law which requires that a license be taken out and a bond for $2,000 filed before one can do business in nursery stock in the state of Washington.

APPLE GROWERS' CONGRESS.

The American Apple Growers' Congress was held at St. Louis Nov. 17 and 18, with a large attendance. Delegates from nearly all the states were present. Henry M. Dunlop, the president, opened the meeting by delivering the annual address, in which he commended the organization on its growth. L. A. Goodman, of Kansas City, secretary of the Missouri Horticultural Society, read a paper on "Growing a Commercial Apple Orchard," and L. W. Stanton, of Richview, Ill., president of the Southern Illinois Horticultural Society, spoke on "The Several Methods of Marketing Apples." During the afternoon session, Wesley Greene, of Des Moines, Ia., secretary of the Iowa Horticultural Society, read a paper on "How to Increase the Market Demand for Apples." Charles Crandell, of Urbana, Ill., instructor in horticulture at the University of Illinois, spoke on "Experiments in Preventing the Destructive Work of Apple Curculio." Professor John F. Stinson, superintendent of pomology of the World's Fair, discussed the "Apple Exhibit at the Exposition." Thomas J. Burrill, instructor in botany and horticulture at the University of Illinois, spoke on "Bitter Rot and Late Experiments Thereon."

The congress will meet again in St. Louis the first week in September, 1904, and the use of the convention building on the World's Fair grounds was accepted with thanks.

Henry M. Dunlop, of Savoy, Ill., was again elected president of the association; W. R. Wilkinson, of St. Louis, vice president; T. C. Wilson, of Hannibal, Mo., secretary; Wesley Greene, of Des Moines, treasurer, and Professor John T. Stinson, of Mountain Grove, Mo., statistician. The delegates were entertained by the officers of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at the World's Fair grounds with a fine spread at which Frederick W. Taylor officiated. Most of the delegates left for home Wednesday night, much pleased with their visit.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

VISITED CHICAGO: Wm. Cox, of the Cox Seed Co., San Francisco, Cal.

THE first of the 1904 general retail seed catalogues to come to hand is that of Chas. Winsel, Los Angeles, Cal.

THE dealer who sold Evergreen sweet corn for $15 per bushel last year has also a few bushels this year that he will let go at the same price.

JAMES B. KIDD, representing the Cox Seed Co., San Francisco, visited St. Paul and La Crosse this week. He is due at Milwaukee and Chicago shortly.

THE Corn Belt Seed House has been incorporated in New Jersey, with an authorized capital of $100,000, by A. Charles Cook, C. M. Buckley and B. B. Virden.

THE pickling varieties of cucumber go at from $1.50 to $3.00 per pound. One lot of 1,000 pounds is offered at $1.50 per lb. Evergreen sweet corn is eagerly sought and $5 per bushel has been paid; $7.50 to $10 is about what those who have any are asking, and last year's maximum price of $15 per bushel for Evergreen is likely to be realized for a genuine article.

CABBAGES are now selling at good prices and a stiff market is likely to prevail all through the winter. Onions are also advancing, and as there is not an over supply, prices for them will probably soar later. The prices that growers get for these articles during the winter have quite an effect upon the size of their seed order for them the following spring.

THE severe frost of the past week has not improved the outlook for sweet corn. A considerable quantity that has been counted upon as being available for seed, and which under ordinary conditions would have been all right, was in too green a state to stand the freeze. The worst thing about this is that the sections where the chances for securing good quantities of Evergreen and other canners' varieties was the best, are the ones that have been hit the hardest. Scarcity of sweet corn is no longer a matter of debate, it is an admitted fact.

GOVERNMENT SEEDS.

We are in receipt of the following circular letter dated Washington, D. C., November 18, 1903, and signed William Wolff Smith, newspaper correspondent:

Our services have been enlisted by several firms prominent in the seed trade who desire to secure the suppression of the congressional free seed distribution. While the trade is substantially a unit in demanding the abolishment of this distribution, there is a great divergence of opinion as to the plan which can be most effectively employed, and we are therefore addressing every member of the trade with a view to obtaining an expression of opinion from them as to what they think is the best method to be pursued to this end. We invite your attention to the enclosed circular, giving a brief historical account of the congressional free seed distribution as conducted for nine years, and setting forth the evils attendant thereon. We respectfully ask a careful perusal of this circular by you and that you give us your views at your earliest opportunity.

From these replies, and with your support, guided by the wishes of the majority of the members of the seed trade, it is the intention of our clients to formulate and inaugurate an active plan of campaign with a view to eliminating the item for the free distribution from the agricultural appropriation bill at the ensuing session of congress. To be effective this work must be begun at the earliest possible moment; therefore a speedy reply from you will be of material assistance in determining how far our clients will go in this matter. Please let us hear from you at once.

In Mr. Smith's circular he gives figures to show that in 1896 the government seed shop sent out $75,000 worth of seeds while in 1904 $290,000 is to be expended. He states that in 1901, under contract, the cost was $4.45 per thousand packets, while this season, cheaper seeds and less quantities to the packet put up under government management will cost $6 per thousand packets. There is much other information of like character familiar to everyone who has watched the government seed distribution, but one statement which may be news to many is that "several firms, who, because of their prominence in the trade, and the positions occupied by their members on various committees of the seedsmen's organizations, might naturally be expected to aid the movement against the congressional distribution, are selling to the department large quantities of 'new and improved' varieties of seeds which are distributed by the department as 'novelties and specialties.' As each package of such 'novelties and specialties' contains a circular giving the name of the firm supplying the seeds, they are thus given tremendous advertising by the department at the expense of the public purse."

LOCKLAND, OHIO.

It was my second visit to "Bloomhurst," Mr. Partridge's comparatively new range of houses. When I first visited the place, some four years ago, it consisted of four or five houses, the nucleus of the present large range. Mr. Partridge's establishment now consists of twenty large houses, in the neighborhood of 100,000 square feet of glass, with a boiler pit holding three boilers of sufficient capacity to provide for six additional houses to be built in the spring. A stroll through the ten carnation houses proved interesting indeed. Here I beheld the cream of the standard varieties as well as those of recent introduction "done to a turn." Clean, strong and healthy will about describe the condition of the plants. From all appearances they did well in the field, which accounts for their splendid behavior since housing. Like most of the progressive growers of to-day, Mr. Partridge believes in early planting. That early planting is the better method a glance at any modern carnation establishment, east or west, north or south (and I have seen a few in my travels) would soon convince the most skeptical. "Pinch your plants if you do not want your flowers early," remarked a prominent grower to me, "but give them an early start in the houses if you expect good results."

However, to return to Mr. Partridge's carnation houses, like everywhere else, Lawson is boss, among the pinks, though in stem it yields to Mrs. E. A. Nelson. The latter, as grown here, bears out all the claims that were made for this fine, though much abused variety. Floriana does equally well, promising to be at its best for Christmas trade. Genevieve Lord, Frances Joost and Melba are still holding their own here, the first one especially, looking as fine as it did in its halcyon days, when first put upon the market.

What Lawson is among pinks, Wolcott seems to be among whites, with White Cloud as a close second. Boston Market, although small as compared with its half-brother or cousin, Wolcott, is nevertheless a fine and paying variety. Peru is still given a chance, though in all probability it will be its last chance. Apollo, Crane and Estelle are the trio in red and while all do well, Mr. Partridge thinks (and many growers coincide with him) that there is ample room for a good one in that color. It is to be hoped that the introductions of this season may meet all expectations.

A glance at the rose houses was equally interesting. Planted in time, with good clean stock and well treated since, the roses, as a matter of course, are yielding good returns. There are nine houses, ranging in size from 25x150 to 30x235, given to roses. Bride, Maid, Ivory, Golden Gate, Liberty, Meteor and American Beauty are the varieties grown. A fine residence, equipped with all modern conveniences, built recently, is now the abode of the presiding genius of "Bloomhurst." S. S. S.

LANSING, MICH.—Gordon B. Smith and Clifford W. McDowell have purchased the Riverside greenhouses.

If your REVIEW is a few hours late in reaching you this week it is due to Thanksgiving falling on the usual day for mailing the paper.

FRUITDALE, ALA.—The Southern Floral Nursery Company has established a branch at Buccatuma, Miss., where they will grow a number of acres of roses, narcissi, etc., besides pecans and strawberries next year.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.—Business in general is rather dull, with plenty of good stock to be disposed of. Ed. Johnson is recently out of the hospital, after an operation on his eye. A bowling club has just been started, composed of twenty-five florists and private gardeners.

GREENVILLE, O.—O'Brien Bros., who are the latest to start in business here, have 3,000 feet of glass, having added 1,000 feet during the past year. James Frost is building a modern residence to cost about $5,000. Miss Allie Smith is looking for a suitable location to which to remove her greenhouses. 'Mums are good and selling well, carnations backward.

The shortage in shipments of all kinds of cut flowers, except violets, toward the end of last week naturally lifted the market. These are Monday's prices and it is not at all likely that there will be any marked advance for Thanksgiving. Violets are coming in such a flood that even the best special bunches of 100 selected flowers do not go above $1.50. The aggregate day's receipts is estimated at a quarter of a million.

PELARGONIUMS.

J. J. asks: "How shall I treat English pelargoniums from now on till in bloom next spring? They are in 3½-inch pots and kept on the dry side."

Spring is not the time to propagate the show pelargonium, which is doubtless meant; they should be propagated in September. If these plants have not yet been cut down, do it at once. Cut them down to within three inches of the pot. They will break freely. Give them scarcely any water till the young growth appears, which will be in three or four weeks; then shake off all the soil and shorten back the longest roots and repot in no larger pot than they were previously in. Give them a light bench and about 50 degrees at night. They will need a shift in February. The tops of the plants that you cut off will root freely now in sand.

The usual time of flowering of these beautiful pelargoniums, so handsome and yet so little grown nowadays, is May and June. By August they have made their growth and should then be gradually and only slightly dried off and September is the month for propagating, as described above. I will add once more, you must cut low down or the two-year-old pelargonium becomes a most unsightly plant.

W. S.

THERE is no paper that comes to me which is read with more real interest and benefit than your excellent publication, and I trust it may remain with us long, and continue to improve.—WM. M. LINDSAY, Birmingham, Ala.

Trade rather lagging last week, though at its close there was a little spurt and all the stock on hand was closed out. Mums continue abundant, too abundant. Good roses are hardening in value and prices have moved up a cent or two. Today there is a better inquiry all around.

"OUR advs. in your paper this year have certainly been most satisfactory in results."—GRAND RAPIDS VIOLET Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Market.

We have had a shortening up in the supply of roses and chrysanthemums during the last few days, but still there are plenty to meet all demands. Trade has improved considerably with all the storemen and the outlook for a good trade from now on is very good. In roses the quality has improved and some fine Brides and Maids are now in the market, which sell easily. American Beauties are also in the best of condition and meet with good demand.

Carnations are in active demand and not near enough arrive to go around. White and good pink in particular are very scarce. Chrysanthemums are wholesaling at $5 to $15 per hundred; some of the large Jones, Eaton and Golden Wedding bring $20 per hundred; a few specimen blooms 30 cents each. Violets, valley and mignonette are arriving in larger quantities and the demand is good, while sweet peas of excellent quality are selling slowly.

Smilax is a glut and hard to move at respectable prices.

Notes.

Mr. Burki is sending in some fine blooms of Enchantress and Prosperity carnations and the best Maids, Brides and Cusins coming to this market come from his Bakerstown place.

Blind Bros. struck it just right on a nice lot of giganteum lilies for Thanksgiving.

Patrick Maier is cutting the first Romans and Paper Whites in this section.

John Bader has his greenhouses well stocked with decorative plants for Christmas.

G. and J. W. Ludwig are receiving regular shipments of roses from the Dale estate, Canada, among them the new rose, Canadian Queen, which is much admired and quickly bought up by their retail trade.

Frank Faulk, one of the few among the craft who is a true nimrod, has returned from a successful pheasant hunt.

John Baldinger, who met with a painful accident some weeks ago, is able to be about again.

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Club occurs Tuesday evening, December 1. Christmas decorative material, plants, etc., will be on exhibition and some practical demonstrations made of the various uses of material. A large attendance is expected at this meeting.

Visitor: Congenial Mr. Skidelsky was in town. He said he finds business very good.

PACIFIC COAST.PLANT NOTES.*Violets.

The violet, although generally considered one of the easiest grown garden flowers, is not a money maker for the average grower. There was a time a few years ago when most of our florists had a patch of the old-fashioned single Russian variety, and later of the well known California violet, but both these varieties have been discarded and the business has fallen almost entirely into the hands of the Italians and they grow the Princess variety almost exclusively. About ten years ago almost all our violets came from San Mateo and Menlo Park, and considerable money was made by growers who had many acres devoted to their culture, but since then our supplies are obtained principally from Ocean View and the Italian gardeners have the industry almost exclusively in their own hands.

Violets to be profitably grown have to be as carefully handled, almost, as a houseful of American Beauties. In the first place the climatic conditions must be just right. If the neighborhood is especially subject to frosty nights—and a few hundred feet in this locality makes big difference in temperature—you will look in vain in the morning for long-stemmed flowers, and will find instead a few little short-stemmed chaps not worth gathering.

Violets seem to like a stiff, sandy loam and they want to be kept well cultivated, so that they will have no check until the rains commence. The runners are taken off in March and April and the leaves tipped off and covered in beds of sand until they make a lot of fibrous roots. The ground where they are to be planted is plowed at least twice and, the young plants being ready, are planted out generally in May. The rows are from three to four feet apart, so as to give plenty of room to pass between with a horse and cultivator, and the plants are planted about two feet apart in the rows. Violets, although generally not considered rank feeders, do not do well after a couple of seasons on the same ground, and the best results are obtained invariably on new soil. No use is made of the old plants, and they are usually plowed up and the ground used for something else.

Red spider seems to be the only drawback to the successful growth of violets and, as I stated before, in such localities as are blessed with cool and more or less foggy nights this little insect is unknown, and, if the plants are well cultivated and the problem of picking them cheaply is solved, the violet becomes a very remunerative crop. I find that many of our Italian friends have all the way from six to a dozen children, and they can all be found out in the fields from early morning until late in the day, harvesting the crop.

Princess of Wales comprises nine-tenths of the crop and a few growers still have patches of Marie Louise, Neapolitan and Swanley White, but they are all late blooming kinds and not in great demand. The first flowers were offered about September 1 this year and wholesaled at $1.50 per dozen bunches. Violets can be made to flower all the year if the runners are kept picked and plenty of moisture is furnished, but the flowers are weak of stem and fall to pieces very soon after picking during our several hot dry summer months. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had an almost steady down-pour of rain for the last five days and business has suffered in consequence. Although the dark days are not productive of any great quantity of indoor flowers, these have been ample to supply all demands. Several of the stores have had a goodly quantity of funeral work, but outside of this there is practically nothing doing. Violets are coming in more plentifully than they have been at any time during the season, and I think there will be an over abundance of them in a few days. The Stanford-Berkeley inter collegiate football game on Friday last used up thousands of yellow 'mums, and great quantities of red ones, but the sidewalk venders had the bulk of the business. Paper White narcissi have made their appearance and are being sold at $1 per hundred, wholesale. If we have plenty of moisture and not too much frost we can count on plenty of these flowers for several months to come. Valley remains scarce, and is in good demand.

Notes.

The Shanahan Floral Company reports business much ahead of last year at this time. Their show of flowers is one of the best in the city.

H. M. Sanborn, the well known florist of Oakland, who has been keeping a record of the rainfall for the last quarter of a century, predicts a heavy rainfall for the coming season. Mr. Sanborn is considered quite a weather prophet.

The death of Orestes Pierce last week removes from our midst one who was greatly interested in horticulture. Mr. Pierce had one of the finest collections of orchids in California. G.

MONTREAL.

The ideal weather permitted the florists and gardeners of Montreal to bring their best to the chrysanthemum show this season, and, with the exception of specimen plants of chrysanthemums, the exhibition was far the most creditable the club ever held. The decorations, under the supervision of J. Bennett, were beautiful, the competition the keenest for many years and the only feature lacking was the attendance of the well-to-do people of the city.

Among the outside exhibitors were Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., who had a fine table of undissected chrysanthemums. In roses and carnations, the display of the Dale Estate at Brampton, called forth general admiration. J. H. Dunlop, J. Gammage & Son and Whittaker Bros. also exhibited with success.

The first premium awards were as follows:

F. C. Smith first on groups of chrysanthemum and foliage plants, on twenty-five ferns in 5-inch pots, on fern in hanging basket, on six palms, on specimen palm, on six orchids.
J. Eddy & Son first on mixed ferns.
W. Alcock first on asparagus, on three zonale geraniums.
W. J. Wilshire first on one fern, on three ferns, on tree ferns, on three palms, on specimen orchid, on three orchids, on three cyclamen, on twenty-four cut chrysanthemum blooms, on three crimson.

Wilshire Bros. first on funeral design.
C. A. Smith first on six primulas, on three flowering begonias.
J. Pidduck first on six solanums.
P. McKenna & Son first on callas, on pan of foliage plants, on basket of flowers.
E. McHugh first on Lorraine begonias, on twelve cut chrysanthemum blooms, on six blooms in variety, on three white, three yellow.
R. W. Whiting first on six zonale geraniums.
T. Gorman first on three pink blooms, on twelve white, on twelve yellow.
W. G. Pascoe first on six chrysanthemum plants, on three plants.
Hall & Robinson first on one specimen chrysanthemum plant, on six plants in 6-inch pots, on twelve plants in 6-inch pots, on ivory roses, on vase of mums arranged for effect, on basket of mums, on wreath of mums.
H. Dale Estate first on Bride, Bridesmaid, Liberty, Perle, Meteor, Beauty and vase of fifty roses, on white, red, pink, dark pink, Mrs. Lawson, yellow, crimson, "any variety" and vase of 100 carnations.
Jos. Bennett first on mantel decoration.
In the classes for fruits and vegetables Geo. Trussel won fourteen premiums, W. Alcock three.
C. A. Smith and P. McKenna & Son six each.

CRESTLINE, O.—Chas. De Greve has purchased the N. Amos greenhouses.

ERIE, PA.

Death of Mrs. Geo. R. Schluraff.

The death of Mrs. Schluraff, at 11 p. m. November 17, has taken from her family a wife and mother devoted and beloved, from the social circle a friend esteemed for sincerity and unfailing kindness, one who was an unfailing helper in every undertaking for the general good. Mrs. Schluraff was born at Westmillcreek, Erie county, Pa., in 1855, was married in 1875 to Geo. R. Schluraff, a resident of Erie, and senior member of the Schluraff Floral Co. She was gifted with more than the average ability, being an able helpmate to her husband, who has always credited her with a substantial share in laying the foundations and aiding in the upbuilding of his large business, in which her artistic taste along the line of designing was an invaluable help. Two children, Miss Iva and Vern L. Schluraff, survive their mother, the latter of whom is one of the younger business men of Erie, also a member of the Schluraff Floral Co.

CARLISLE, PA.

The fourth annual chrysanthemum show was held in the Armory November 4 to 6 under the auspices of the Civic Club. The show was a success in all its features. The competition was keen in the classes for cut blooms and the judges had a difficult task to place the premiums. The principal exhibitors of cut blooms were George Guignet, gardener to F. C. Bosler; Jesse Robbins, the florist; W. S. George, gardener to J. W. Wetzel, and the Carlisle Nursery, H. E. Seitz, manager. In the plant classes W. S. George and Geo. Guignet captured most of the premiums. The judges were F. Heck, of Reading; Mr. Padgett, of Harrisburg, and Mr. Byer, of Chambersburg. W. S. G.

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

A car load of bulbs, shrubs, plants and seeds arrived from England at the World's Fair grounds at St. Louis on Tuesday, Nov. 17. These are to be used for ornamenting the grounds around the British pavilion, which is now in the hands of T. W. Brown, the English landscape gardener, assisted by R. J. Mohr, of St. Louis, who has twenty men working on the grounds. The consignment is from the following firms: The Royal Seed Establishment, of Reading; Kelway & Son, Langport; Carter & Co., London, and H. Cannell & Sons, of Kent. The present shipment consists of a large number of crocus, hyacinth, tulip and iris bulbs. Each of the above firms has been allotted space in the gardens surrounding the British building.

W. E. Barnes has been appointed superintendent of forestry at the World's Fair.

John Hertherington, formerly with Michel Plant and Bulb Company has been engaged to take care of the Philippine grounds. Mr. Hertherington will make a good man for them, as he is thoroughly posted.

J. H. Hadkinson, of the landscape department at the World's Fair, has a big force of men under him and proposes to work all the winter through. Everything under Mr. Hadkinson's charge is in first-class shape. At the March meeting of the club Mr. Hadkinson will read an essay on "Landscape Gardening at the World's Fair."

Frederick W. Taylor, chief of horticulture, has returned to the city after being absent for ten days, and gave all his attention to the apple growers' congress.

FOR CHRISTMAS

You will find our Xmas Bells great sellers. Last season there were not near enough to go around. Better hang a big 8-inch Bell in your window and a small 3½-inch one near your desk where customers will see it when ordering flowers. There are three intermediate sizes you will find useful for stock; all are well made. Our Red Stars are very effective in decorations where much green is used. You will find our Scarlet Immortelles a valuable aid in giving variety to your work. They can be made into designs, dotted over our natural wreaths or used in a dozen other ways.

DENVER, COLO.

After three days of zero weather we again have moderate temperature, much to the satisfaction of the smaller growers, who are short of coal at the present time, owing to the coal strike that is on throughout the state of Colorado.

There has been an abundance of cut flowers up to the present time, and if it had not been for funeral work some of our fall months would have been as bad as summer months.

Chrysanthemums this fall have not been up to the standard and consequently the demand for them has been light. Enchantress grown by Benson and Daniels & Fisher have been superb and consequently brought good prices.

E. W. Davies, president of the Denver Floral Society, buried his eldest son, George, on November 15. The funeral was well attended by the craft and numerous emblems were sent, noticeably a large gates ajar by the Denver Floral Club.

The Park Floral Co. is about to open a branch store at Broadway and Seventeenth avenue, where they have a large store and greenhouses for plants and the first of the year they will move from their down-town store entirely. The new location should be a good one.

Scott & Reynolds have leased a store on Sixteenth street and will start a first-class flower store there January 1.

The Denver Floral Club has resumed its meetings after a summer vacation and great things are expected in the future.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Business for the past week has shown a slight inclination upward, while the cut of everything has shortened up considerably, and the coming week will see the greater part of the 'mums cut and sold. Prices held as last quoted on fresh stuff, but job lots could be bought at very low prices last week.

Notes.

A recent visit to the greenhouses of the J. M. Gasser Co., at Rocky River, found everything in good shape for cold weather, especially in the new boiler room, where two eighty horse-power boilers are taking care of the new section at present, and a new 100 horse-power boiler is held in reserve for later use. The new houses built this season bring the place up to 300,000 feet, and it covers about five acres of land, many of the houses being 28x300. Roses and carnations are the principal plants grown and the stock is looking good. A large house of violets is in with a large cut of flowers at present, and a house of sweet peas showed many fine blooms. Everything is arranged with the view to save time and labor, and Mr. Gasser is to be congratulated on appearance of his place. E.

BLOOMFIELD, CONN.—The Windsor Tobacco Growers' Association is growing its young tobacco plants in a greenhouse 12x225, with large ridge and side ventilators, and finds it a much better way than the old, outdoor seed bed method.

THE Chicago Flexible Shaft Co., 100 La Salle avenue, Chicago, issues a neat little booklet called "From Misery to Pleasure," which while not prepared expressly for distribution among florists might be profitably perused by everyone who is still using that antiquated device, the stove, in the closed wagon, to keep stock from freezing while being delivered on a winter's day. The Chicago Flexible Shaft Co., of which T. J. Clark is secretary and treasurer, manufactures the Clark Wagon Heater, also Clark coal for use in same.

GROWERS ALL OVER THE COUNTRY WRITE SIMILAR LETTERS

OSSINING, N. Y.
I have used your FUMIGATING POWDER for some years and I have always found it first-class; there is no danger of it killing anything except the green fly, which it does with dispatch. I never use anything else for insecticide, nor do I wish anything better.
Yours truly,
C. BARSON.

BATH, ME.
We use your Fumigating Powder and we are never troubled with aphids; it does not harm the blooms in the least, and we find it the cheapest way to fumigate—and we have tried everything that is on the market.
Yours truly,
JOHN H. RAMSEY & Co.

NORTHAMPTON INSANE HOSPITAL, MASS.
After using your Fumigating Powder I must say that in fifteen years' experience with various methods of killing aphids, I find this the most effectual and economical method I have yet tried.
Yours respectfully,
GEORGE W. THORNILY.

BAYSIDE, N. Y.
I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.
Yours truly,
WM. BELL.

We will mail at your request our booklet telling about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. We guarantee satisfaction or money back. Free trial bags for the asking. THE H. A. STOOHOFF CO., Tobacco Powder Hobbyists, 118 West St., New York.

ST. PAUL.

If the flower show gave trade any boost it has not yet been apparent. Business was fair the past week but there was nothing rushing about it. Stock is fairly plentiful and prices have been increased a little in anticipation of Thanksgiving business. Red roses and violets are among the short articles. Carnations are more plentiful this season than ever before. In that line the growers are catching up with the trade. Violets seem to be off crop, owing to the fine Indian summer or to some condition beyond the grower's control. Mums are still plentiful, but this week will see the most of them gone.

Through carelessness on the part of a drayman Holm & Olson lost a large number of beautiful palms by freezing. They were being taken home from the show.
X. Y. Z.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

We are having a little winter weather, just about cold enough to keep the florists looking out for their fires. Business is not as good as it ought to be at this season, but everyone is in hopes of doing a good Thanksgiving trade.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held November 12, at W. L. G. Brown's greenhouses and we had a very nice time. Mr. Brown is a bachelor, but you would never know it by the nice lunch he put up for us. We had a very interesting talk on chrysanthemums. The next meeting will be held at S. S. Peckham's greenhouse, Fairhaven. C.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Present indications point to another big flower show here next year.

HARTFORD, MICH.—W. H. Bashfield has his greenhouse nearly completed, but, not having a heating apparatus, will not open until spring.

Novelties In Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bratt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

WEDDING DECORATION.

The accompanying illustration of a wedding decoration is from a photograph of work put up by Poole & Purllant at St. Patrick's church, Bellefontaine, O. Wild smilax was largely used about the entrance and white chrysanthemums and ribbon were used along the central aisle. At the altar chrysanthemums and decorative plants were employed to good effect. This is said to have been the most elaborate decoration ever put up in Bellefontaine.

DRAPERY STUDIES.

IV—Mimicry.

Among the patterns which can be copied sensibly and legitimately in flower and foliage designing are corn stalks, spider webs, lovers' knots, geometrical figures as found on insects' wings, and numerous beautiful unnamed forms of decoration seen on plants and animals and even on minerals. Many of these are mimicked from one great natural order in another, orchids being conspicuous examples in their resemblance to the markings of butterflies and other insects.

The different kinds of spider webs are fascinating copies, and not difficult to reproduce. Among the accompanying illustrations (see half-tones on pages 48 and 49) is the photograph of a reproduction of a simple form of web employed in a screen. The same design has been used on front of a chapel wall, and in the chancel and on either side. The design can be adapted to a large place and can be repeated indefinitely on even or rough surfaces, across corners or in tall doorways or arches.

A free adaptation of the corn stalk design is found illustrated. A medium sized string of smilax with a few strands pulled out at the sides and top gives the idea.

Lovers' knots of smilax make a pretty frieze on a light background, a detail of which is illustrated. The frieze is a design seldom used in our work, but very effective along the upper walls or above a wainscoting. It may be briefly described as a panel set horizontally on a wall.

However, a step too far in mimicry will carry an incautious worker into the domains of the ridiculous. Similar indiscretions have led to attempts at reproducing animal life. It is no wonder sensible people laugh at those florists who send out lambs, elks, etc., where the customer's taste is not the one to blame. It must always be remembered—perhaps with many of us first learned—that our designs are not ultimate in their purpose; that they are merely suggestive, and when we have reminded the onlookers of green pastures and shady nooks, we have accomplished our highest purpose.

ROSES.

Seasonable Treatment.

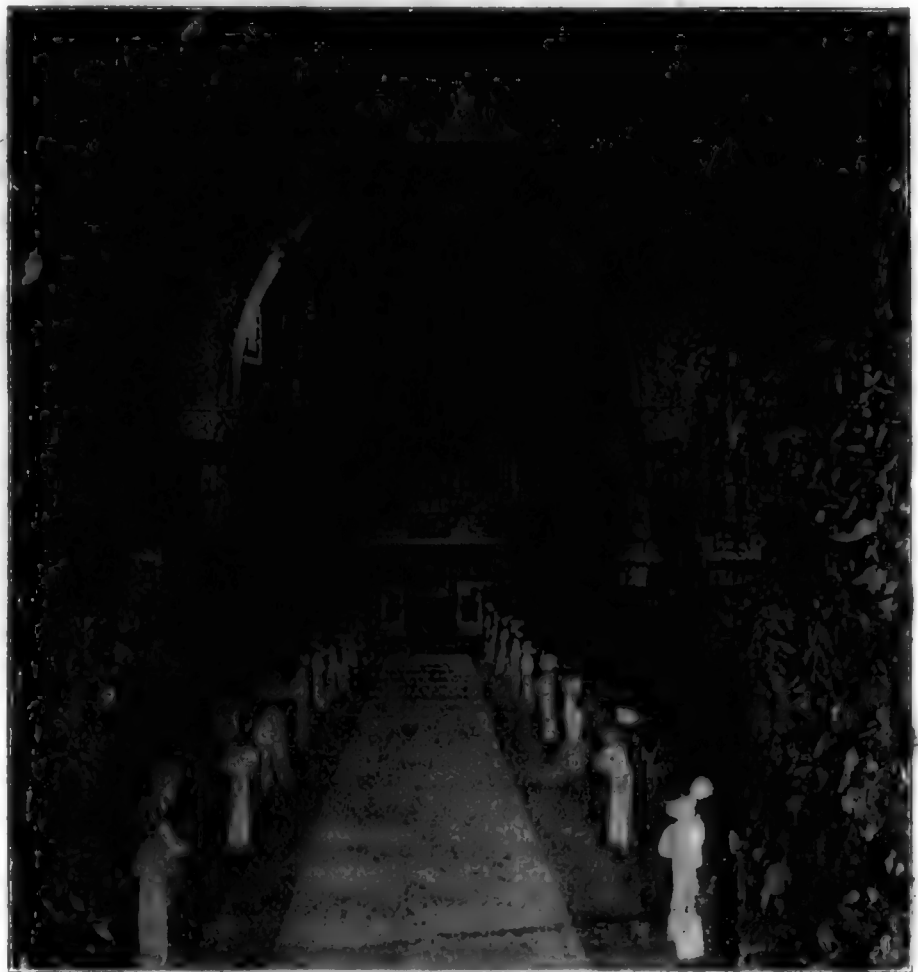

The general care of the houses during the dark months will entail more critical and accurate judgment in all its details, as any error or carelessness in the application of feeding material, air, heat, or water will be certain to bring trouble. This being the season when all vegetable life calls for a rest, roses will, under the most favorable conditions, have a tendency in that direction. This tendency it is the task of the grower to overcome by bringing all his knowledge and skill to his assistance.

By a course of gentle stimulation and feeding he can keep his plants continually on the move, though at a much slower rate than during the preceding months. Owing to this sluggishness the plants require much less food and as canes and large buds. When the mulch is partly exhausted an application of manure water once a week will also greatly strengthen them. It is better not to use liquid manure when the crops are ready to cut, as this is apt to destroy their keeping qualities. A generous sprinkling of air-slaked lime once or twice during the time they are making wood will help to give stiffness to the stem and to the necks of the buds. Soils which are deficient in calcareous matter are prone to produce weak necks if unassisted during the dark days.

Color is another matter which must be looked after. Too much rich feeding will, as a rule, detract from the brilliancy, especially in pinks, and has to be carefully guarded against. A sprinkling of wood ashes once or twice a month will help to retain the coloring and even intensify it. Overcharging the air with the fumes of either tobacco or sulphur will also bleach the color of pinks, and to obviate this light and periodic fumigations should be practiced rather than wait until compelled to adopt radical measures to effect the purpose.

The benches should be carefully examined previous to watering, especially after mulch has been applied, as the mulch may be quite wet while the soil in the bench may be bone dry. A critical examination will also reveal some evaporation is also at a minimum the supply of water will have to be more carefully apportioned.

A repetition of a few general rules for safely conducting the houses during this period, with some hints on the methods of their application, may be of some benefit to the less experienced.

For stock which is in a healthy and vigorous condition, a light mulch of a rich nature should be applied every six weeks. This will help to develop strong spots which are drier than others. These ought to be gone carefully over previous to the general watering, so that the soil may all be equally wet. Keep the soil at the bottom of the bench from ever becoming dry. Keep a sharp lookout for red spider, and whenever it appears use the syringe on that spot at once to keep it from spreading. If this is strictly attended to we do not need to use a great deal of water to keep it in subjection.

Give plenty of air on all favorable occasions, even when compelled to keep a good fire going, and if at all possible keep on a small crack of ventilation during the night. This prevents an accumulation of moisture in the house which, when it condenses on the foliage, is very harmful.

When a long spell of cloudy weather is with us it is much safer to drop the temperature a few degrees so as to retard the growth as much as possible, as the wood produced under such conditions is seldom very robust.

A careful study of these general rules, care in putting them in practice, the maintenance of a steady temperature suited to the different varieties and the attending conditions, should bring us over the dullest and shortest days with safety.

RIBES.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Plants.

Presuming that flowering and foliage as well as berried plants are going to be a leading feature of our Christmas trade, there should be no delay in seeing that your stock in these lines is up to date in variety and quantity. If you are the only florist in a small town and "monarch of all you survey, your right there is none to dispute," you may not have to keep much variety to please your patrons, but nowadays, in small cities as well as large ones, there is keen competition and lots of it, and the more costly your location and business expenses, the more need of keeping a first-class stock in every line of your business. We can remember wiring for Christmas stock, such as orange trees, about December 20, and received the answer, "Sold out." Very few retailers even with a dozen houses at their back can or do grow all the plants that are asked for at the holidays. Our patrons, and that includes the whole public, do like novelties. Perhaps we as a nation are not at all peculiar that way, yet I think we slightly are, and the love of novelties must be catered to.

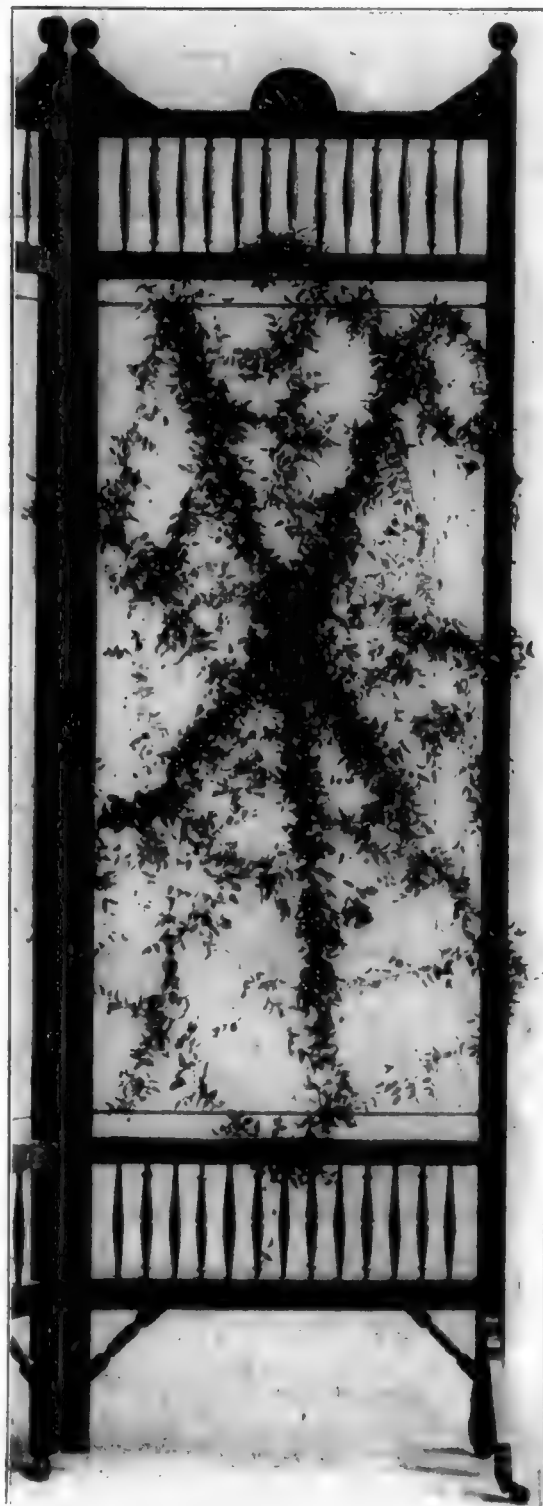

Of plants likely to be in favor this coming festive season, the azaleas ought to be just showing color, and will be in fine order in three weeks.

Poinsettias.

Some florists would not consider the poinsettia an important plant, yet we do. If you have to buy them, buy small plants in pots and keep them in the pots until a few days before Christmas and then put a half dozen in an 8 or 9-inch pan. No matter how little you disturb the roots, they feel it and soon the yellow leaves appear, so unless they were put into pans two weeks ago, delay it now until you offer them for sale.

This reminds me of a little incident I once overheard in my friend, Mr. Christensen's office. It appears a lady customer had sent her maid for the fern dish which had been left a few days previously and finding it unfilled, so reported to "the Missus," and after waiting a few days the good lady arrived via carriage in person and as she bounced into the office she let out: "Why is my fernery not filled?" and then came forth the wisdom and diplomacy of the noble Dane. "Madam, I did not think you wanted the fernery till Saturday and we always put off filling them till the last moment. As they begin to die from the time they are put into the dish, the later they are filled the longer you have them in good condition." "Oh, I see! Ah! To be sure; but you will send it tomorrow, surely, won't you? Good afternoon." And there was peace and good will all around.

Lorraine Begonias, Etc.

The wonderful Begonia Lorraine is sure to be in demand. Frail as this little gem looks, it travels well and I do hear occasionally of some people keeping it looking well in the living rooms. Even if it does drop its blossoms in a week or two, it has lasted longer than a bunch of roses or carnations. There is something in me that whispers low but clearly that more and more will plants be used for table decorations. All the art that our greatest floral artists can command can never put together a bunch, a vase or basket of flowers of any kind that will compare in beauty and grace to the growing plant, with its flowers and foliage.

The cyclamen is always a good seller and its price within the reach of all. We made up baskets of cyclamen last year, seven or eight plants from 4-inch pots, and they sold well. Primula obconica is not a great essential, but it is a fine house plant and far outclasses the Chinese, large-flowered primulas in every way.

Bulbous Stock.

It is rather late to remind you of pans of lily of the valley and Roman hyacinths, but both of these are just about as well made up the day they are sold, as any other way.

Lilium longiflorum, or rather the Bermuda type, is sure to be wanted, not so much as a plant as for church decorations. We found this year that 5 to 7-inch bulbs, potted as soon as received in July and kept in a frame till they were an inch or two above the soil and then kept in a rose house temperature came in, the earliest, just on December 1. So 70 degrees at night for the last two months would have brought them in several weeks earlier, but in the rose house temperature you can have a full crop by the holidays.

Foliage Plants.

In foliage plants I don't think there is any doubt that the Boston fern will take the lead. What is more free and easy and beautiful and, withal, does so finely in the house, office or store? There is one in a high-toned crockery shop in our city, and it has been there three years, that for beauty of growth can't be approached even by Wm. K. Harris.

Palms have sold slowly for a year or two past, but you must have a few in value from $1 to $10. Kentias, arecas and latanias are the kinds. Pandanus Veitchii sells well and is a most perfect plant for the drawing room. Dracaena terminalis has many friends; its rich coloring sells it and if we could give it a good character as a house plant more could be sold. Dracaena fragrans and the two fine varieties, Lindenii and Massangeana, are good house plants and are well liked.

Rubbers not over eighteen inches high are asked for, but the branchy plants sell much better. In mentioning the Boston fern I by no means wish to ignore the magnificent aristocrat, Pieris, and the very graceful Anna Foster, but they are not quite common enough yet and where you have large plants of them they should be worth double the old Boston variety. Anna Foster is a particularly fine plant as a large specimen. Another fern, Cibotium Schiedeii is not only a most beautiful plant but thrives in the most uncongenial surroundings. A cheap hardy fern is Cyrtomium falcatum.

Novelties.

Now there is no novelty in any of the above. Perhaps among the berried plants we can introduce one or two. Holly, which thirty years ago was an unknown article to a northern florist, is now picked and transported north by the train load and now we have the European holly in beautiful pyramid trees in tubs. The European holly, or at least the common green species that is a native of the British Isles, grows naturally more erect than our southern holly, which, although I have not seen it growing is, I think, a rambling, spreading bush. The beautiful imported hollies are expensive, but you should have a pair or two. You are sure to have some customers who will snap their fingers at expense if the eye is captivated. The Ardisia crenulata is the neatest of the small berried plants and the berries hang on an indefinite time. The solanums are inexpensive and showy berried plants and have a Christmas look.

Aucuba Japonica.

A plant we are going to invest in to a limited extent is the berried aucuba. To those who have never visited temperate Europe, Aucuba Japonica is mostly a stranger. It is a common evergreen of the gardens of England and thrives in the little front yards in the smoke and dust of the largest cities, where no other tree or shrub will grow. As a boy I have pulled birds' nests out of aucuba bushes, but in all England, and perhaps Europe, the aucuba bore no berries. It was grown merely for its handsome, mottled yellow and green leaves. Why up to thirty years or so ago was the aucuba berryless? Simply because the plant or plants brought from Japan to Europe were of one sex and some thirty or thirty-five years ago some plants of the other sex were introduced and then gradually the aucubas of Europe bore berries, which added greatly to its value. As an ornamental evergreen, buy some and tell your customers that a very cool room or hallway will do for them. They are a patient and long suffering plant and will put up with more dust and dirt, hot air and frost than any plant I can think of. I can remember one in a tub on a veranda where an Episcopal minister, every Saturday night, would rehearse his morrow's sermon, and the poor plant lived on.

Pandanus Sanderi.

In conclusion, we hope you are well supplied with the leading staples of your business, but if you have to buy, do it at once. In looking over this gossip, I meant to say when speaking of Pandanus Veitchii that another year we will have with us in quantity that most beautiful plant, Pandanus Sanderi. It's just a little too expensive this year, although for such a choice plant sent out at a very moderate price. The writer saw this plant, or plants, soon after their arrival at Riverton. At first sight it does not strike you as much different from Veitchii, but soon it grows on you, and on familiar acquaintance it appears to you as a twenty-dollar gold piece, and Veitchii is the silver dollar. Niagara Falls is disappointing to nine out of ten who first look upon it, but on every future visit its majesty grows, and so does this beautiful golden pandanus.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.Cuttings.

I would repeat my advice of last year, to try the plan of buying some unrooted cuttings of those varieties you intend to add to your list. I use the word "some" knowing there are those who will consider the method as a radical departure from the prevailing one and, while I never advocate any change in method unless it has proved beyond doubt to be an advantageous step from beaten paths, it is ever my desire that new ideas advanced by your humble servant be first tried on a small scale. The subject was fully covered in these notes last year and it only remains to add in support of my claim as to the relative shipping qualities of rooted and unrooted cuttings, that in January last I packed together, in the same box, both kinds and mailed to a friend in San Francisco who remailed to me at once without unpacking. In sixteen days the box returned, the rooted cuttings knocked out; the unrooted ones, while a trifle groggy, still in the ring and promptly revived in water.

In buying new stock, it is important that orders be placed early and a date specified for delivery if anything like success is looked for the first year. Lateness in ordering is responsible for many failures of meritorious varieties to give a good account of themselves the first year. The party of whom you order must of necessity carry out his part in delivering at the time set, especially in the case of new introductions of high price and unknown behavior. In any event it is your right to demand delivery at the time specified, be your order large or small. As a rule all purchased stock should come to your hands during January and February and if unrooted it is obvious that they should be received earlier. There are, however, varieties which do better when propagated during March and a shipment of such received thus late can be handled to good advantage. Floriana is a good example of this type and Prosperity seems to lean that way.

Buying twenty-five or fifty of a large number of varieties may be a good investment for the hybridizer but for the grower who depends strictly on bloom in quantity the fewer sorts he has to cater to, the more profitable they will be to him, provided they are well grown and back numbers are supplanted by up to date ones as they prove their superiority. If you are a grower for the wholesale market, 500 of a variety is little enough for a fair trial. Those who retail their own product can, with 250, judge their trade's opinion of the aspirant, definitely settle the question of commercial value and in either case, if deemed worthy of a place, there are plants enough to work up a sizable stock for the following season without need of overpropagation.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.Propagating.

It is not too early now to begin propagating some of your carnation cuttings, although there is no great hurry with most varieties, if you have plenty of stock. Such varieties as Lawson, Crane and Mrs. Bradt you should get into sand at once. Of the two latter varieties you want a good-sized plant to put out in the field and also a good-sized plant to bring in in the fall to get plenty of blooms. Mrs. Lawson wants extra early housing unless you grow it inside all summer and in the latter case you cannot err by having your plants large. The best house of Lawson I have seen this fall was planted on the benches last May from 2½-inch pots. This house is certainly in grand shape and will pay for the room it was given for six weeks last spring, when the old plants might have brought in a few dollars.

There are other varieties, too, that want early propagating. In fact, any variety that does not grow very strong in the field should be put into the sand early. I am taking for granted that you house your carnations between July 1 and August 20. If you do not begin housing until the middle of August, then you can propagate in January and February and be early enough. All you want in that case is to have your young plants rooted through in 2-inch pots by planting-out time. There are more carnations rooted and sold after February 1 than before that date, but you will find that all the best growers propagate early, and by early I mean in December and January.

New Varieties.

If you have some new varieties you think a great deal of you will want to make all you can for next year. This is where you will need to exercise good care and judgment. Don't get overanxious and strip the plants of every little shoot you can get hold of, but always keep in mind the health of the plants. About this time we go over them and take off all the short flowering shoots that have not begun to run up yet and also the largest side shoots from the blooming stems. These make good cuttings. Leaving the blooming shoots on the plant gives the plant something to work on and prevents a check, such as cutting back all the shoots would give. By the time all the shoots have bloomed the lower shoots have made good breaks and are ready to take up the strength of the plant. By taking off only the strongest cuttings each time you can take off a nice lot of fine cuttings about every two weeks without weakening the plant the least bit. This is certainly much better than to strip the plant of all the cuttings every time they are large enough to handle and you will get more cuttings in the end. Remember that in most cases of newly introduced varieties the stock is worked pretty hard the year of dissemination, and perhaps a couple of years before, and it will pay you to work it with a view to preserving the strength and health of the plants.

If this rule were followed more closely our varieties would not deteriorate so rapidly after dissemination. The good ones are always worked so hard for a few years after dissemination that it is no wonder we are always ready for new varieties in every color. Only the very strongest growing kinds will survive this kind of treatment, for even a season or two. Diseases of various kinds soon make their appearance and then the variety which promised wonders is pitched out, not on account of a weak constitution, but on account of an abused and weakened constitution.

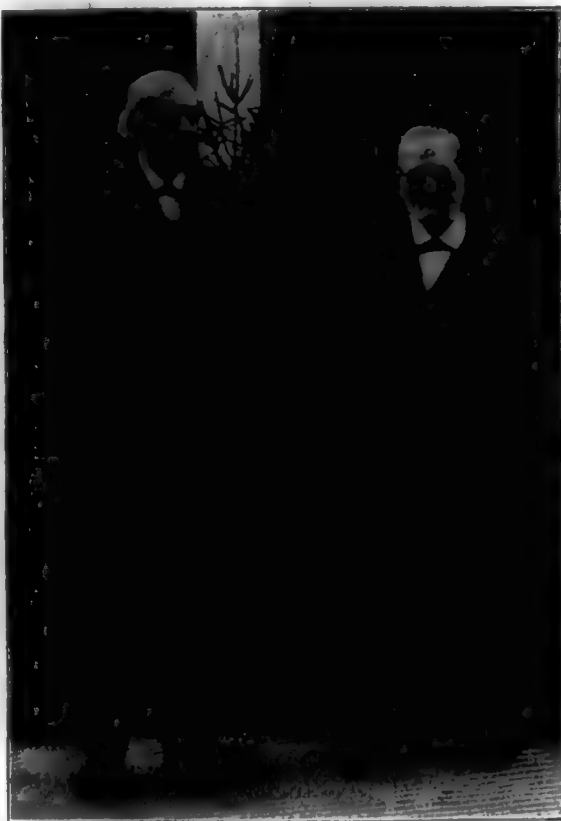

Selection of Cuttings.

The selection of the cuttings has a great deal to do with the success of stock next season. I have several times in these notes given my views as to what is the best cutting, etc. The best growers agree that the very best cutting is the shoot that springs from the flower stem near the base of the stem. The cutting up higher which has a stem about an inch or so between the stem and the first leaf is of little use. It will make a weak plant, which will be inclined to run to bud too much. If we have a fine variety in a limited quantity we do not hesitate to take the young flowering shoots, which have not yet begun to run up. But unless we run short of cuttings we stick to the side shoots and we certainly would not take blooming shoots to make cuttings to sell; that would be wasting money.

You should have your sand on the place before this and if you were wise you refilled your propagating bed while the weather was fine, so that now you can go right ahead with the cuttings.

Whenever you can get a heel on the cutting, and you usually can on the side shoots, it will help you a little in rooting it. The wood is a little harder and will not decay so easily. Make a clean cut with a sharp knife at the heel and trim the ends of the grass a little before sticking them into the sand. Some growers do not approve of the trimming, for no good reason that I could ever hear, but I like to trim them a little because I think they wilt less and they will take up less room in the cutting bench without crowding. When plants or cuttings are crowded moisture accumulates and excessive moisture is apt to start damping off, bringing on cutting bench fungus.

Handling the Bench.

Select the cuttings of an even size as much as you can, so there will be no small ones to be crowded by the larger ones. Pack the sand firmly after watering it thoroughly. With a table knife draw a deep line through it about two inches deep and about one and one-quarter inches away from the last one. Stick the cuttings into this furrow or line about an inch deep and three-quarters of an inch apart. After filling the row press the sand against the cuttings, draw another line and proceed as before. Some use a stick about an inch wide as a rule to draw the lines, but with practice you will not need it. Be sure, however, to get your rows straight, as crooked rows are apt to make trouble when you take up the cuttings later on, especially if you have many varieties and only a few of a kind.

Use only new labels in your cutting bench, or anywhere else, for that matter. Sometimes you will see a grower use a label that had been used before, merely crossing out the old name and writing the new name on the unused side. Occasionally he forgets to cross out the old name and when the cuttings are taken up he finds two carnation names on one label. Unless he knows the varieties by sight he does not know whether he is planting or potting the one or the other. You cannot be too careful about your labels.

After sticking the cuttings into the sand give another good, thorough watering. No more watering will be needed for several days, except a light spraying each day to keep them fresh. Keep the sun from striking them, but give all the light you can otherwise. We use the north bench in a carnation house, as we have no special propagating house. It is partly boarded up in front, that is about two-thirds of the way from the bench toward the ground, to keep the heat under the bench. In front of the bench and suspended from the roof hangs a curtain of muslin which keeps off the sun and draughts but lets in the full light from the north. We consider this away ahead of the old way of laying paper on the cuttings. The sun beating on the paper on a bright day will cause heat to gather under it and wilting and damping off are very apt to follow. You can work back of this curtain, too, without exposing your cuttings. Always do your spraying in the morning, so that the cuttings can dry off again before night. The spraying will not be needed every day after they are callused, but only when the atmosphere is dry and wilting might result. I will take this for a subject in the near future, but get your cutting bench ready at once and prepare to propagate your next season's stock. A. F. J. BAUR.

SOME YOUNGSTERS.

At the New York show this year there were three or four youngsters deserving of especial note. Samuel Henshaw has been associated with flower shows for sixty years. He well remembers the Botanical Gardens exhibition at Manchester, England, in 1825, where his father was an exhibitor.

Dr. F. M. Hexamer and Charles Allen, Sr., were two more of the youngsters who were in their glory, youngsters in spirit and enthusiasm if not in years.

ROSES AT REINBERG'S.

Mme. Abel Chatenay.

This is one of the best roses in the Chicago market, and continues to grow more popular year after year. Commenting on a vase of Chatenay exhibited at the recent show given by the Chicago Florists' Club, one gentleman said it is the "greatest thing on earth," and certainly it is one of our best varieties. It produces strong, straight stems, every flower perfect in color and form, a very easy rose to grow. It very seldom mildews. A temperature of 58 degrees and plenty of ventilation is about what it requires. At Peter Reinberg's it is the most profitable rose grown, and it certainly has come to stay.

Uncle John.

The rose named Uncle John is a sport from Golden Gate and originated at Peter Reinberg's place three years ago. They now have 15,000 plants on the benches. The rose is much more pink than Gate and unfolds its petals like a Bride or Maid; it is a great improvement over its parent in that respect. The young growth is quite red, but it turns to a green much darker than Gate. It is as great a producer as Golden Gate and creates a good impression wherever exhibited. At the recent show given by the Chicago Florists' Club, it was highly commended, and it was awarded a special prize of $40 at last year's Kansas City show, where it was named after the veteran florist, Uncle John Thorpe.

GEORGE COLLINS.

LAPAGERIA.

This gem of the greenhouse is by far too seldom seen in our collections, and very rarely indeed in commercial establishments, although they are among the most beautiful and easily grown of all of our greenhouse climbers. They succeed best when planted in a prepared border, although they can be grown in pots or tubs, and trained around a wire trellis, with a certain amount of success. When properly handled in this way and when in full flower they form one of the most fascinating sights of the showroom or parlor. They are, however, at their best when planted in a prepared border in the greenhouse and trained against a wall or over a wire trellis or hung from the roof of the house, as then their pendant and waxy flowers are more exposed to view.

To attain success in the cultivation of this most beautiful flower it is essential that we select the most vigorous and healthy plants to begin with, as weakly plants are worthless, seldom if ever becoming vigorous, even under the most favorable conditions. The compost best suited for them is three parts peat to one of fibrous loam, with about one-sixth of the whole bulk of sand added. When laying down the bed or preparing the pots or tubs ample drainage will have to be provided, as they require large supplies of water when growing. This has also to be accompanied by heavy syringing during the period of growth. The syringing must be stopped as soon as the blooms begin to open.

If grown in pots or tubs, they require frequent mulching, especially when new growth commences. This mulch should be composed of two parts dried cow manure finely pulverized, one part fibrous loam and one part of peat and one other part composed of equal portions of leaf mold and sand, the whole to be thoroughly incorporated and applied at intervals of six weeks to the depth of one inch.

During the summer they require a cool temperature with a light shade. Their insect enemies are few and easily destroyed. Red spider, being one of the most persistent, is easily kept in check by the syringe. Greenfly can be subdued by fumigation or by placing tobacco stems under or near the benches. Slugs and cutworms create a deal of havoc among the young shoots if allowed to have their way, especially when just emerging from the soil, but these can be easily destroyed by any of the arsenate poisons if properly applied.

The varieties most usually grown with satisfactory results are Lapageria rosea and L. rosea alba, although there are many varieties between these colors, both pleasing and interesting. By crossing L. rosea and L. rosea alba almost any shade of pink can be obtained, but these colors are variable. The colors of L. rosea, even, are not fixed and certain, as in a batch of cuttings from that variety we may obtain many shades.

The usual method of propagation is by layers; that is, to plant a vigorous parent plant in a well prepared soil and peg down the runners. We can by this method obtain a great quantity of young plants, but many of them will prove to be of weak growth and useless so far as making good specimens.

The most interesting method of propagation is by seed, as by crossing the varieties we can obtain so many shades of color without changing the type, many of them during their first and second year of life greatly surpassing their parents, both in size of bloom and brilliancy of coloring. They retain their health and vigor and maintain their flowering qualities if kept in a temperature not to exceed 55 degrees. Of course, during the hot spells of summer they must often exceed this, but a little ordinary judgment will help us along in this strait.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Continually noting the items in the trade journals about this grower who will double his capacity next year, another who will cover ten acres, and many others who will erect several large houses each, it has got to a point where it will require serious thought as to the probable outcome of all this additional building. To observe the general condition of the market in its present stage, the increased output is plainly seen. There is no more anxiety on the part of the buyer as to not being able to get what he wants at any time of the year and standing or advance orders are becoming a thing of the past. The buyer no longer seeks the market, but the wholesaler is now seeking the buyer. The grower is no longer besieged with messages from the commission man to make shipments, nor is it necessary to cut the stock before it is in a marketable condition.

The good old days when times of "stock scarce" prevailed most of the year now seem reversed, except for an occasional spurt in demand, or sudden change in temperature to cause a temporary shortage, which still may have the tendency on some caught short in trying to fill an order, to cause them to immediately purchase material for another block of houses. To note in a recent issue the statement that one Chicago grower controls almost as much glass devoted to cut flowers as all the Philadelphia growers put together seems like a surprising statement, and yet that is a small proportion of the glass in what is called the middle west district.

While all the building is going on by the wholesale grower, the dealer who has been depending on the wholesale market is doing likewise, thus continually curtailing the shipping territory until it narrows down almost entirely around the big growing centers. Then what? Common stock or inferior grades have but little room on the market now, and are the choicer blooms bringing a paying average? Novelties remain novelties hardly long enough to get the first cost out of them before they become common property. This looks like the cause of overproduction and the pressure brought to bear on the market by the immense amount of other stock thrown on the market daily in all competing lines. Assuming that there is a large increase in the consumption of flowers, and why shouldn't there be, the volume of stock must go somewhere and many lots are disposed of below the cost of production and prices are within the reach of all. There is not the same fluctuation in prices as in years gone by. They are mostly forced down by the supply rather than being advanced by demand. We are passing through an era of prosperity and it may be well to look ahead during these times and give some thought to President Burton's warning at the last S. A. F. meeting. INCOG.

CALCEOLARIAS, ETC.

I want to grow calceolarias and cinerarias from seed. I have the plants started now, with three to four leaves. I have had no experience in the treatment of these plants. Will you please through your columns advise best soil, temperature and method of growing these plants, also gloxinia bulbs and oblige, W. L.

Notes on both of these cool greenhouse plants have many times appeared in the columns of the REVIEW. They need almost identical treatment. Sometimes seed of cineraria is sown in May or June to have them in bloom at the holidays, but for the commercial man that is not desirable and sowings at the end of August or in early September will give you good plants for March and April. Neither wants, during the winter months, a higher night temperature than 45 degrees and the fullest light. They should never be crowded or the foliage has no room to spread and be perfect, without which neither of these plants would be worth bench room. The soil is not so particular a point. A fresh yellow loam with a fourth of leaf mold will do well for them. From the time they are shifted from 2 to 4-inch pots don't sift the soil; use it rather coarse but firm. A fine sandy soil is just what they don't like.

Although both of these showy plants are considered beneath the notice of many of our great and illustrious specialists, to do them well needs not so much skill as constant care and attention. If allowed to wilt through neglect of water, the leaves may be lost. If overwatered, or rather if the water does not pass freely through the soil, the plants will go off dead beyond redemption. From 2 to 4-inch and then to a 6-inch, the flowering pot, is about the shift they want. Their

They are now at rest, or should be, and the subject can rest till a more seasonable time. The seed of gloxinias is not sown till February, but the bulbs are so inexpensive that it is better to buy those and start in February and March, of which I will have something to say in due season. W. S.

CALCEOLARIA AMPLEXICAULIS.

After such an unfavorable season for bedding plants in general, it is most gratifying to see this charming old plant one mass of bloom. It has been quite a picture all through the summer, and will continue to flower until cut down by frost, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine. We have it planted in a large group, well sheltered from the wind, and in a half-shady position, in good rich soil. The cuttings are taken at the same time as those of that old bedding variety, Golden Gem, and inserted in sandy soil in a cold frame, covering the glass at nights when very keen frosts are expected. About the latter part of March these are transferred into a rough frame, and only covered up at night. By keeping the shoots pinched back nice bushy plants are obtained for planting into permanent quarters early in May.

When the cuttings are rooted, if a few dozen are potted singly into 5-inch and 6-inch pots, placed in a cold frame till established, and then brought into the greenhouse, they will bloom in advance of those outside and will be found most useful. The flowers of this calceolaria are a most pleasing shade of lemon, a shade not usually met with in any other plants. The rust does not seem to attack this, as it does some of the others, and especially Golden Gem. But we have been very free from rust this last two seasons, owing, I think, to planting in shadier places, also where the soil con-

ED. REVIEW—Enclosed find a dollar for the REVIEW another year. I wrote Ribes some time ago, for advice on roses; please thank him for his timely advice and words of encouragement. I followed his directions and the plants responded right away and have behaved splendidly since. I also thank you (this is Thanksgiving Day) for your courtesy in publishing my query and the confidential way you treated my correspondence. One article from the pen of Professors Ribes, Scott, Baur or Osborn is worth, to the man in trouble, a dozen subscriptions to your best of papers. W. G. N.

ED. REVIEW—I am making a success of my business and it is largely due to the help I get from the REVIEW. With me trade has not been so very good for the fall until this month, when it increased over 100 per cent. I benched my carnations in July and I do not think I ever had a finer outlook for the winter. I originated a variety of tomatoes seven years ago, which I consider unusually fine. In a good season, very few of them will go under a pound, and from that to two and one-half pounds. While not all perfectly smooth, they will average 75 per cent smooth ones. This year from 125 vines we had all a family of eight could use, which was no small amount, sold $14.81 worth and canned seventy-one dozen three-pound cans. The crop would have been much larger had they not blighted toward the close of the season.

PHILIPPINE ORCHIDS.

Orchids to the number of nearly 4,000 plants, collected in all parts of America's new archipelago in the Pacific and valued by experts at more than $30,000, were received at St. Louis a few days ago and are now in an Old Orchard greenhouse under the eye of John Hetherington, recuperating from their journey of 7,000 miles over sea and land.

These Philippine orchids will be in bloom when the World's Fair opens on April 30, next. At this writing, early in December, the plants are supposed to be passing through the "rainy season" of the Philippines. They are growing and gaining strength to survive the "dry season" that will begin about the time the fair opens. Then the greenhouse which will be the orchid's home in the Philippine reservation of forty acres on the exposition grounds, will be a bower of tropic beauty.

This wonderful lot of orchids, which was collected by Dr. Gustave Niederlein, in various islands of the archipelago, has for its star a splendid specimen of the Phalaenopsis Schilleriana. The plant is worth $500. It is a prolific bloomer, as many as 174 flowers having been produced in a single blooming period. Phalaenopsis Schilleriana originated in the Philippine Islands, but is now exceedingly scarce in the Islands.

Among the vandas the most attractive in the collection is the Vanda Sanderiana. It was originally discovered, in 1881, on the Island of Mindanao, one of the Philippine group.

Among the small flowering orchids in the World's Fair collection is the Saccolabium guttatum. The flowers, individually small, compensate for any deficiency in size by the profusion in which they are produced. In the numerous greatest enemy is the common green aphid. If there are any of these in the county they will come to roost on your calceolarias and cinerarias. Tobacco stems among the pots at all times is a great help, but a mild fumigating twice a week without a miss is a necessity.

family of arides, the Lawrencianum is easily the favorite. The first plant of this variety that was sent to England, it is said, was sold to Sir Trevor Lawrence for $1,175.

Of Dendrobium superbiens an unusually fine specimen was secured by Dr. Niederlein. Fine specimens of Phalaenopsis amabilis and many other good sorts are in the collection, which, on the whole, is a wonderful demonstration of the richness of the Philippines in treasures for the horticultural collector.

MUSHROOMS.

This ought to be one of the best paying crops, providing they are properly handled and a first-class article is produced. We often hear complaints that certain products won't sell, but when we go to the root of the matter, nine times out of ten the fault is with the grower, who is trying to foist a second or third-class article on a first-class market, and I am satisfied that a great deal of complaint about mushrooms not selling is due to just such conditions. It is hardly to be expected that a local market can always be found for mushrooms, which may be classed as a rather high grade vegetable, but any one within reach of a town or city with a good middle class or high class population ought to be able to make this a paying crop.

I have often been asked: "Can mushrooms be forced successfully exposed to light?" And I invariably reply that they can. The yield will be just as heavy as if grown in the dark, but grown under such exposure, although they are just as good, they would hardly sell on any market on account of their dark brown color, where those grown in the dark are white and clean looking in comparison. A mushroom house with regular benches and provision made for maintaining a temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees is undoubtedly the best, as it is easier to maintain the proper atmospheric conditions, but there is no reason why good mushrooms cannot be grown under greenhouse benches, if not too close to the hot water pipes, the drying influence of which would be detrimental to the crop. If the bed can be made under the center bench of a house where the pipes are under the side benches only, and the proper temperature can be maintained, there should be no trouble in producing a good crop of mushrooms.

The old custom of using all fresh manure and keeping it turned for eight or nine days, until the heat was pretty well worked out of it, is very seldom practiced now, all good growers recognizing the fact that by this method a large percentage of the ammonia must escape and that this ammonia is one of the principal ingredients that ought to be retained. The manure should be procured as fresh and free from straw as possible and mixed when received, with soil and old rotted manure. We have had very satisfactory results with a mixture of one-half fresh manure and the other half well rotted manure and soil, rather more manure than soil being allowed. The whole is turned over twice to thoroughly mix, and the bed made up without further delay. Opinions differ a good deal regarding the depth of the bed. Some make them as shallow as eight inches, while others make them as deep as fifteen inches. A deep bed is less liable to dry out and will continue to bear longer, but it is doubtful if the extra yield will pay for the extra material necessary to make a fifteen-inch bed. I think a depth of twelve inches is, all things considered, about best.

NEW GLASS IN MISSOURI.

Mueller Brothers, of St. Joseph, Mo., have for some years been engaged in growing vegetables with no better facilities than are afforded by hot-beds, but last year they put up a fine range of four greenhouses, intending to force vegetables for a season or two and work into cut flowers. They built on the Dietsch plan, the houses being 100 feet long by fourteen feet nine inches wide. There is continuous ventilation and the houses are high and airy, the gutters resting on iron posts seven feet six inches in the clear. Each house has two benches five feet six inches wide and two walks twenty-one inches wide. The accompanying illustrations give an idea of the character of the plant.

WORLD'S FAIR LAWNS.

The World's Fair lawns, in the sixty-nine acres comprising the agricultural section, are exhibits, and they have been as carefully planned as any of the other show spots in the outdoor section. Joseph H. Hadkinson, superintendent of outdoor planting, appreciates the value of the lawn in giving an artistic finish to his work, and the lawns, all of which were planted under his personal direction, will be admired by millions of visitors during the fair.

All along the east side of the great Palace of Agriculture a few months ago was a mass of yellow, sticky clay. A ravine, seventeen feet deep, was filled with clay brought from the top of a neighboring hill. This was smoothed, plowed and harrowed and a top dressing of good soil, nearly a foot thick, was spread over the clay. This was worked, pulverized and prepared for the seed.

The seed selected was blue grass and rye grass, mixed in equal parts. The rye grass was first in evidence, but it has done the work that was required of it and has passed away. The rye grass comes up in six or seven days, and is a nurse crop for the blue grass. It grows taller and shields the blue grass from the sun. As it is not permitted to go to seed, it dies out and leaves the blue grass alone on the field. One could tell on an October morning in St. Louis why it is called "blue grass."

After getting the ground into proper trim the seed was sown, broadcast by hand, one pound to each 100 square feet. The seed was covered with what Mr. Hadkinson calls a "choppy" motion. A gardener goes over the lawn with a rake, and instead of raking and rubbing the seed in, he swings it slightly and allows the teeth to enter the soil about an inch. When the rake is lifted the soil is turned under for about half an inch. The pulverized soil must be treated to fasten the seed in the ground. On the comparatively level places, a heavy roller is used. On the terraces, and some of the World's Fair terraces incline at an angle as great as 30 degrees, a "pounder" is used. This is a board a foot wide and a foot and a half long, fastened to a handle with blocks added until it weighs about fifteen pounds. The surface is "tamped" with this. When the earth is smoothed the final work is done. All summer a great pile of stable manure had lain in a heap in front of the garden. It was thoroughly decomposed. This was run through a soil pulverizer and sprinkled over the ground. The covering is slight, but is all that is needed. It keeps the sun from baking the soil and causes it to retain the moisture.

There is one pest that has demolished many a lawn, and the World's Fair landscape gardeners had a short bout with it. This pest is the mole. These little fellows burrow a few inches under the surface of the ground and raise ridges in the lawn. The moles feed on the earthworms and harm the roots of the grass only incidentally. But if the moles are not killed they will destroy the lawn. "Gus," Mr. Hadkinson's foreman, watched Mr. Mole and studied him. The mole takes his meals regularly, morning, noon and night. The ridges made by the mole must be beaten down, and watched. When the mole goes over the route again the ridge is again raised. Then the process is easy. Take a spade, drive it in the ground across the mole's route and behind him. He may be easily dug out and dispatched. In less than a month the moles were banished from the agricultural section of the World's Fair.

BOUVARDIA KING OF SCARLETS.

Last autumn I contributed some notes, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, on the origin of some bouvardias and their culture, giving at the same time a short selection of varieties. To this selection must now be added King of the Scarlets, which is in every way a decided acquisition. It was first brought prominently before the public on December 9, 1902, when at a meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society it was shown in good condition by J. Robson, Bowden Nurseries, Altrincham, and received an award of merit. The flowers of King of the Scarlets are larger than any other of the bright-colored varieties, particularly in the width of the lobes, while in color they are of a clear bright scarlet, with the tube almost white. Of rich-tinted forms, the vivid scarlet variety, President Cleveland, which was sent to England from the United States in the latter part of the 80's, rapidly advanced in popularity, and maintained its position as the best scarlet-flowered bouvardia till King of Scarlets put in an appearance. Both, however, are so beautiful, and so distinct, that there should be no question of one superseding the other, as in most gardens a place might well be found for two such charming plants. While the variety, President Cleveland, had a long journey before it enriched our gardens, the new comer had a still longer one, as we are, I believe, indebted for this to our Australian cousins, it having been raised at Sydney, New South Wales.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Thanksgiving day and all of the past week the trade was good in all lines. The West End florists being busy with decorations and the down town florists with plenty of funeral work. The business done on Thanksgiving was big and from the expressions of most of the leading florists, it was ahead of last year's business. The weather was most beautiful, just cold enough to stimulate the retail trade. According to the daily papers there is a big crop of debutantes in society for this month and there will be quite a lot of receptions, which should help the cut-flower trade greatly.

The supply of stock during the past week was equal to the demand, with prices up on first grade stock. Chrysanthemums are nearing their end; still are rather short in stem and bring only $2; Paper Whites $3 and $4. No Harrisii yet, with callas scarce. The market is again well supplied with ferns and other greens. Asparagus is not overplentiful and in demand.

Holly and green have made their appearance and some of the florists have ordered ahead, for wreathing to be used for decorating down-town business houses in about ten days. The weather is favorable for plant delivering and the report is that house plants are moving better. Trade in this line should be good from now on. The plants for Christmas trade at Schray's, Sanders', Beyer's and Windler's are in fine shape, with plenty of everything for the holiday trade. Some good shipping orders are reported by our wholesale men and all three had a busy week.

Various Notes.

John Young and wife spent Thanksgiving week with their daughter in Chicago. James Young and son were also in Chicago the past week, visiting relations.

J. Currie, of Currie Bros., Milwaukee, was a recent visitor. Mr. Currie was here looking after the interest of the Wisconsin building at the World's Fair.

Wm. Adels, late with Mrs. M. M. Ayers, is now with F. H. Weber, at Boyle and Maryland avenues.

Mrs. Wm. Ellison, of the Ellison Floral Co., on Olive street, reports business very satisfactory. The company has moved into larger quarters next door to the old stand.

George Waldbart made a grand show of chrysanthemums in his show window Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers reports a very busy week, with decorations, and the biggest Thanksgiving she ever had.

Alex Siegel and Fred Foster spent a day in Chicago the past week, looking up stock for Thanksgiving trade.

Jules Vacherot, chief gardener of Paris, is here to prepare the plans for the landscape work around the French pavilion at the World's Fair grounds.

Don't forget the Florists' Club meeting next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Odd Fellows' building, Hall No. 2. An exhibition of roses and carnations is expected. Mr. Brown, the English landscape gardener, Jules Vacherot, the French gardener, Messrs. Taylor and Hadkinson, of the horticultural department, and Dr. Wm. Trelease, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, are expected to be present at this meeting. Talks by these gentlemen and the essay of James W. Dunford, and a discussion by Max Herzog, should make an interesting meeting and all members should attend.

Invitations are out for the fourteenth annual banquet to florists, nurseries and gardeners, given by the Missouri Botanical Garden, to be given at the Mercantile Club on Friday, December 11. This comes under the heading of the will of the late Henry Shaw.

Otto Koenig, C. A. Kuehn and W. J. Pileher, Florists' Club members, are showing some of their fine bred chickens at the poultry show this week, which is held in the Exposition building.

Bowling.

The bowling club had a light attendance but some large scores were made, a few choice late varieties are coming in. The demand for them has fallen off considerably since Thanksgiving and the buyers are looking more for other flowers, which is better for the trade at large.

The market on cut roses is still somewhat heavy; that is, on the poorer grades, and enough of the fancy grades are in for the demand, but they seem to clean up pretty well. Beauties are still in ample supply. Select fancy stock commands $5 and $6 per dozen. Medium length has the best call, at $3 to $4 per dozen. Shorts sell well and are cleaned up almost every day at $1 to $2 per dozen. The price on smaller roses is from $2 to $8 per 100. Brides and Maids are good on an average. Meteors are coming with quite a number of bullheads. Carnot and Golden Gate sell well. Perles are in little demand. Carnations are of good quality and in demand. Fancy stock of Prosperity, Lawson and Wolcott brings $4 and $5 per 100. Joost, Daybreak, Crocker and Crane bring $2 and $3 per 100. Good Hill bring as high as $4. White is in big demand just now. Violets are in good demand at $1 per 100, with only California in the market. Valley remains in moderate demand at $4 and $5 per 100. Romans and Paper Whites are more plentiful. Romans especially those of Charlie Kuehn. Below will be found the scores of the four games rolled.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Trade is very quiet this week, and great is the disappointment thereat, for everyone in the market had been hoping that business would continue at its accustomed gait after Thanksgiving. Beauties, ordinarily one of the most staple of products, are the weakest item in the list this week, particularly the extra lengths. All the big growers seemed to get good cuts on just before Thanksgiving and, with light demand, the long-stemmed stock has been moving at rates, where a quantity could be used, probably lower than this market has ever before seen at this season of the year. Medium grades have held up fairly well. There is very little call for Brides and none too much for Brides; little good stock of either variety is available. Chatenay, Liberty, Sunrise, Carnot and Meteor do a little better and are shown in much better quality. Carnations hold stiff, supplies being not in excess of demand and qualities good. Last week colored carnations were in the lead, some whites being left on Thanksgiving day, but this week the greatest call has evidently been for funeral flowers. Chrysanthemums are about at the end of their season. There are still quantities about but the quality is generally lacking. Violets were in sad overabundance at the end of last week, but receipts have fallen off and Tuesday saw the market strong, even with little demand. A few poinsettias are seen.

It develops that the wholesale business for Thanksgiving was not so much below last year after all. The total of sales was fair. Beauties did not bring what they should and violets went to the bad Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning. Also the better grade of mums did not come up to last year's prices. These discrepancies account for whatever shrinkage there was in sales.

Christmas Near.

Christmas is only three weeks away and there is already considerable speculation as to the supply and demand. Some growers fear that the Beauty crop will be off. Other roses are expected to be in good supply. Carnations seem likely to be scarce; in fact, there could hardly be too many. Better size up the situation and make your order early.

One thing the growers need cautioning about is the matter of holding back stock. Pickle if you must (but pickling is going out of fashion) but get your stuff onto the market by December 23. It is a pretty safe assertion that up to that day there will not be as much stock of shipping grade as could be used. The next day the out-of-town demand will be over and the local buyers will be in possession of the market. This is a matter which has been spoken of so often that it would seem that nothing more need be said, but nevertheless, at Thanksgiving one big grower hoarded his cut Monday and Tuesday, when business was good, and brought in a great stock to meet a slack demand on Wednesday.

Various Notes.

Frederick Weber, of Weber Bros., who operate the Grossman place, has bought a piece of ground about 200x325 adjoining H. Bauske's place in Bowmanville and has ordered glass and material for a range of seven large houses, which he will push to completion as early as possible in the spring, as it is his intention to plant Beauties.

The Florists' Club's third annual ball was held last evening at the drill hall in the Masonic Temple. John P. Risch was the manager.

E. E. Pieser says that with Beauties so plentiful, the late mums will be a forced sale.

Glass is at a low level just now and there are those in the trade who look for a rise, as the new wage schedule is the highest on record and the big glass manufacturers are all pretty close together.

George W. Walther has a very neat store on Sixty-third street, in the best part of Englewood, and does a nice trade. An invitation to a chrysanthemum show, recently mailed to everyone for a mile around, helped to keep his place busy.

L. Baumann & Co., capital $20,000, has been incorporated to manufacture florists' and milliners' supplies, by F. H. Gelderman, Ludolph Baumann and G. A. Malmerop.

O. W. Frese, of George Reinberg's, says he looks for a big Beauty crop for Christmas.

John Muno is handling very good Meteor.

L. Coatsworth, of Benthey & Co., who was at New Castle last week, says all the stock down there is looking fine.

Poehlmann Bros. are still cutting chrysanthemums in quantity.

E. F. Winterson is suffering from poisoning in the face.

N. Welter, at 4321 Western avenue, is preparing to erect three houses 20x200.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting a heavy crop of fine Liberty, a good part of them very long-stemmed.

C. H. Fisk is now devoting his entire attention to his west side retail store.

Sinner Bros. are well pleased with the sales on folding Christmas bells; they say the leading retailers are taking to the device.

John Zeck, of J. A. Budlong's, has been suffering with a severe sore throat.

Will Kyle, of Kennicott's, received a telegram on Tuesday notifying him of the severe injury of a brother-in-law in a railroad wreck in Nevada.

WEBSTER CITY, IA.—James Follett has added 1,500 feet of glass for carnations. He reports trade good this season.

MANCHESTER, VT.—W. H. Graham has enlarged his greenhouse and is doing a good trade.

WARRENSBURGH, N. Y.—S. E. Prosser has dismantled his greenhouse on Main street and transferred his stock to his new establishment on Horican avenue.

MITCHELL, S. D.—E. C. Newbury & Son have recently completed the remodeling of their range and have the place in fine shape. The business was established nine years ago and trade is good this fall.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The volume of business in cut flowers has been very large since last week's report. An excellent Thanksgiving, closely followed by an unusually heavy Saturday, consumed practically everything in the market. This week the first german in Baltimore on Monday night, for which many Bridesmaids, violets, Beauties and lilies of the valley were shipped from this city, was followed here by a week of teas, dinners, etc., which has kept the local retailers busy. The demand for Beauties has been very heavy. Chrysanthemums are on the wane, but some really fine flowers of Chadwick, Maud Dean, Eaton and a few other sorts can be had. They sell readily at high prices. Carnations are not plentiful, but the quality is very fine, Lawson being particularly well done. Poinsettias and white lilac have made their appearance, the former at Dunn & Co.'s the latter at Edward Reid's. There is a little bouvardia to be had. George Carpenter has just begun sending in some choice pink and red sprays to W. J. Baker. A few Romans have made their appearance but they will not be plentiful until another week. Greens of all kinds are very fine and can be had in quantity. Shipping trade is very heavy.

Some Ideas in Plants.

I remember with painful distinctness a certain morning spent some years ago among the storekeepers of our great city. I say spent, because it was an absolutely profitless morning at a very busy time. I had a house nearly filled with fine lilies and wanted to market them. Of course they went in due season, but not on that sad morning. Every storekeeper said that before ordering anything for Easter he must see what Harris and Craig had to offer; some said Craig and Harris, but they all mentioned these two and all declined to consider my stock until they had seen both these growers. This made me feel that Messrs. Harris and Craig or Craig and Harris pretty much owned the town, floriculturally speaking. I have since somewhat changed this opinion, now believing that, while they are very highly appreciated, especially at Easter, still the world is a big place and there is room for good stuff at nearly all seasons. Be that as it may, this morning's lesson to a newspaper man means that the REVIEW readers want to know what is going on at these growers' places from time to time. So lately the REVIEW man, accompanied by a friend to cheer him on the way, trotted out to West Philadelphia to see what was doing at William K. Harris'. The proprietor was absent, but his place was ably filled by Mark B. Mills, who made time to show the visitors about and talked in a way that was an inspiration in itself.

The chrysanthemums were pretty well cut out; Thanksgiving finished them practically. There were just enough left to give an idea of what they had been. Our Dear Friend was there and beside it a single plant, with three beautiful orange flowers, a sport from it that should be heard from in a couple of years.

There was a house and more of yellow English primroses, in full bud and bloom, in all sizes from 4 to 10 inch, the smaller pots, the larger pans. Many specimens were hung from the purlins. This is a novelty here and very pleasing in appearance.

The place is strong on berried plants for Christmas, fine specimens of holly, Jerusalem cherries, Aucuba Japonica and Ardisia crenulata filling several houses. Then there are numbers of evergreens in handy little tubs, some of them very choice.

The place is very strong on bulbs. Daffodils are already started; this is earlier than ever before noticed. Boston ferns flourish in quantity and beside it the coming N. exaltata Harrisii, a compact variety mentioned before. Genistas, azaleas and hydrangeas are inside in good condition for growing into flower. There is a large stock of foliage plants, arecas, kentias, ficus, Pandanus Veitchii, Dracena terminalis, etc. Dwarf oranges and ponderosa lemons full of fruit are also specialties. Bulbs will be grown even more extensively than in the past.

Various Notes.

Eugene Weiss has a new grower in charge of his rose houses at Hatborough; the cut, it is stated, is of very fine quality. Brides and Maids are specialties.

Frank Gaul, the enterprising manager of the Century Flower Shop, has been pushing business in great shape of late.

The election of Alfred Burton as a director at the Flower Market has proved a popular choice.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are experiencing a heavy demand for Christmas supplies. Immortelle wreaths and Christmas bells appear to be favorites.

S. S. Pennock is receiving some choice fancy carnations from Rhode Island. He keeps his brother busy with telephonic orders for valley.

M. Rice & Co. state that their business has increased enormously over past seasons. They are working like beavers to get their orders out in time.

Leo Niessen had some good orders for out of town this week.

Pennock Bros. had a handsome Thanksgiving window decoration, using wheat, emblem of harvest.

Herman Schoenfeld had some nice orders this week. Evidently his new store is popular. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market has made a good recovery after a long illness, which looked at one time as though it might result fatally. It was the sickest patient in November the wholesale section can remember. The "oldest inhabitant" never saw anything like it. But it lifts its head again, and its appetite has improved so that it begins to sit up and take notice. It even became aggressive Saturday, when Beauties in some cases touched 50 cents each and Maids and Brides 15 cents each and violets $2 per 100. It was like old times and with proper care there is no need of another retrogression before the robins nest again. Carnations, with the special at $6 per 100 and the novelties at $8 per 100 were "in the running" and chrysanthemums are growing scarce and more valuable every day. Business in the supply line is already phenomenal. Everything looks cheerful, even the stock market, that great indicator of metropolitan floricultural prosperity.

Various Notes.

Friday of this week the dinner to Gen. Corbin will take place, under the decorative supervision of Thomas Young, Jr. The red, white and blue effect on the tables will require large quantities of Meteor, Kaiserin and violets.

At David Clarke's Sons, on Broadway, the immense floor space and basement seem none too large for the display of stock in preparation for the holiday trade. The windows are already gay with cyclamen, heather and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Dreer's new pandanus seems to be a great favorite here. A light basement is utilized as a conservatory. An average of nearly a wedding a day indicates the trend of trade.

The novelty of Pompaeian jardinières and baskets at the Ansonia store of Warrendorff is much in evidence. Several of the Broadway bon ton stores will handle this original conception. These are the days of novelties, and some attractive creations are ready for their debut as Christmas approaches.

Hanft Bros., of Madison avenue, had a large wedding at the Savoy, November 25, the Schumacher-Harbold nuptials. Fifteen tables were handsomely decorated with white roses and chrysanthemums. This firm sent a grand wreath of orchids and valley for the funeral of J. C. Gracy.

Geo. M. Stumpp made a splendid decoration at the Holmes-Crimmons wedding, on last Wednesday, one of the most elaborate of the year.

An epidemic of bronchial troubles seems to have full sway in the wholesale district, some of the very best talkers scarcely speaking above a whisper.

W. Ghormley has been having a siege with his old rheumatic enemy, but is again on deck, none the worse for a ten days' encounter.

Geo. F. Kruse, of Greenville, N. J., 62 years of age, was buried on Monday. He was highly respected and his bereaved family is tendered the sympathy of the trade. Mr. Horan handled the stock he shipped to the New York market.

On Saturday one of the best known gardeners of the east, George Cottam, joined the silent majority. Few men in their time were more popular, and many of his old-time friends attended the funeral services at St. Andrew's church, Yonkers, on Tuesday evening. He was a member of the New York Florists' Club.

Carl Jurgens, Jr., of Newport, was in the city on Monday.

The new Science church, the grandest church edifice in America, built at a cost of $1,185,000, was dedicated on Sunday. The decorations were most beautiful and every room showed evidence of the florists' art. The grounds around the church were completed in the summer and made beautiful by Wadley & Smythe.

The Academy of Music, Brooklyn, was destroyed by fire on Monday, entailing a loss of nearly a million dollars. A great dinner to Senator McCanen was to have been given there in the evening. John Wier & Son had a great quantity of palms and dozens of cases of wild smilax already installed when the suddenness of the conflagration swept everything away. A force of twenty men and women from Mr. Wier's were in the building and barely escaped, thanks the guidance of John Wier, Jr., whose knowledge of the exits enabled him to pilot the frightened people to safety.

John Young is handling a large number of orchids and seems to always have an abundant supply. On Monday he shipped 200 sprays of oncidiums to one house in Philadelphia. His window is brilliant with a sample bank of Wards' Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, of which he expects to handle a large quantity for Christmas.

C. W. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, has now the carnation that has so long been sought for. On Saturday he sent to John Young twelve blooms of his scarlet seedling and it created a sensation in Twenty-eighth street. All the buyers who saw it declared it to be the best scarlet carnation that has ever been introduced. Chas. Thorley bought these twelve flowers at once for 50 cents each and declared it to be "the finest carnation he had ever seen." Mr. Young has already several offers from prominent retailers who desire to control the blooms of this gem. Mr. Ward is certainly to be congratulated on producing this magnificent flower and a brilliant future for it is assured. For size, fragrance, strength and beauty it is par excellence.

I notice that John Birnie has received credit for skill in disposing of plants at auction in the absence of Mr. Elliott, who was "serving his country," and while I am conscious of Mr. Birnie's ability to accomplish anything he undertakes, it was John Bemis to whom credit is due. Kindly correct, as I want to make it safe to attend the next meeting of the Florists' Club on Monday, December 14, and John Birnie will be there.

This meeting is one of special interest. The new officers will be elected. The exhibit of flowers will include some splendid novelties and the old year will receive fitting farewells in speech and song and "the cup that cheers." That should insure a fine attendance.

The breath of the north woods will soon dominate the atmosphere on the river front, where millions of Christmas trees will usher in the festive holiday season. Next week will see West street a forest of evergreens.

Dimmock's address is now 31 Barclay street, with Suzuki & Iida.

C. W. Ward was in the city on Saturday, with samples of some of his season's seedling carnations. His southern trip bore fruit in his election to the vice-presidency of the K. C. & N. W. B. R. of West Virginia.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BUCEYRUS, O.—F. J. Norton says 'mums have been fine and brought fair prices. Roses, carnations and violets are doing well.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—G. Van Bochove & Bro. have rented a part of the C. W. Cook & Co. drug store for a down-town salesroom for cut flowers.

SIBLEY, ILL.—J. K. Postma reports his boiler badly rusted out and he has sustained considerable loss since cold weather came on. He is now putting in a fifty horse-power boiler.

OLEAN, N. Y.—The most notable use of flowers here this season was for the reception for a debutante, where Mrs. F. H. Johnson had charge of the decoration. Asparagus and palms were used and pink chrysanthemums, with Bridesmaid roses and violets.

FRED H. LEMON,
Secretary.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Thanksgiving Trade.

The volume of trade done during Thanksgiving week was about the same as last year, and prices ruled much the same. The supply of roses was good and the quality excellent. Beauties were fine but rather scarce. Carnations fell far short of the demand, the crops being a good two weeks behind. Most of the growers are evidently reserving their best efforts for the Christmas holidays. Violets were good but not overplentiful. Of green, such as smilax, asparagus, adiantum, etc., there was an abundance. Mums were nearly past but anything fresh sold readily at good prices, especially in pot plants.

The prices ruled somewhat as follows:

Beauties, wholesale, $1.50 to $4 per doz.
Beauties, retail, $2 to $8 per doz.
Teas, wholesale, $6 to $7 per 100.
Teas, retail, $1 to $1.50 per doz.
Carnations, wholesale, $2 to $4 per 100.
Carnations, retail, 50c, 75c and $1 per doz.
Violets, wholesale, $1.50 per 100.
Violets, retail, 25c per doz.
Mums, wholesale, $2 to $4 per 100.
Mums, retail, 50c to $1 per doz.

News Notes.

The Dunkley Floral Co. reports a trade that compares favorably with that of last year, selling out clean on roses and carnations.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. are well satisfied with the trade done. They, like the rest, were short on carnations, the quality being excellent, their fancies retailing easily at $1 per dozen. For the convenience of their city customers and to accommodate their increasing trade, they have opened a store in the business part of the city, which they have thoroughly equipped with up-to-date improvements, including the newest pattern of refrigerator, telephone, etc. In the basement they are building a commodious cool room on the most approved principles. Their opening display was very showy, the arrangements being very tasteful.

Reports from the east and north sides are equally good. R.

GINSENG.

At the present time many of the agricultural papers of the country are advertising and recommending that farmers grow ginseng, and those who have ginseng seed or roots for sale are sending their circulars broadcast over the land, telling of the wonderful profits which are to be secured by all who grow ginseng. While we do not wish to in any way injure the business of any one, yet we do wish to warn the farmers of Connecticut against investing heavily in ginseng.

Without doubt some few have made money on ginseng, but for one man who has made money, one hundred have lost all the money they have put into it. The amount of profits which we are told can be realized upon one acre is simply startling; but when it is known that these profits are never realized except theoretically, it becomes a different proposition. I have investigated carefully the ginseng industry in central New York, having visited many gardens, and I am certain that there is no profit whatever for the ordinary farmer.

If one desires to purchase a few ginseng seeds, or better yet, a few ginseng roots to experiment with, he will probably receive information enough to pay him for the money expended, but he should not be disappointed if he receives no financial returns from his investment, and he should charge up the money spent as tuition for his education.

Let the other fellow make the profit on ginseng.
L. A. CLINTON.

PROPAGATING THE POTATO.

Nothing but praise and that of the very highest is forthcoming for this admirable potato, Northern Star, says a writer in the Gardener's Chronicle. Whether or not it will retain the high character formed of it is doubtful when we consider the means taken to propagate it. Many tons will be sold this season, which will be the produce of propagation by cuttings, and although probably the crop so produced will give satisfaction to the grower this season, I maintain and from experience state that this system is wrong, and can only have one ending—rapid degeneracy. Referring to this method Mr. Findlay says: "That everything possible should be done to put a stop to this pernicious innovation." Surely a warning like this from such an expert will doubtless decide many purchasers to ask for a guarantee, when procuring seed of this fine variety, that the crop was grown from tubers and not from cuttings.

SAMUEL S. PENNOCK,

1612-14-16-18 Ludlow Street,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CLEVELAND.

Thanksgiving trade was fair in all lines, with plenty of all kinds of flowers to fill the orders. Chrysanthemums, as usual, had first place, and many grand flowers were seen in the down-town stores. Carnations seemed to have a better call than roses, and the first part of the week were very scarce, but on Wednesday most orders for them were filled satisfactorily. Roses, with most growers, were off crop, and also off color, and not as good as they might have been. Prices advanced on Tuesday and are still held at $3 to $8 for roses, $2 to $4 for carnations, 75 cents to $1.50 for violets, and $8 to $20 for chrysanthemums. Some very nice Beauties were offered at from $1 to $5 per dozen, according to quality.

Smith & Feters, Wagner, Eadie, Gasser, Westman & Getz and the Grant-Wilson Company all had elaborate and very attractive window decorations, and all report a good trade. The growers who retail at the greenhouses were well satisfied with the business done, while the market people did not fare quite so well, owing to the stormy weather.

Some very nice Paper White narcissi were seen last week at the F. R. Williams Co.'s store. They were grown by Mr. Braund, who forces a large quantity of bulb stock each year.

H. R. Carleton, of Willoughby, is sending in some very nice violets, and his dagger fern is fine.

The weather for the past week has been cold and cloudy, with lots of snow and good sleighing on Thanksgiving day, but it has made quite a hole in the coal pile, as it has been steady firing night and day.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Thanksgiving trade cleaned up everything except chrysanthemums, which held out through it all. The cold snap has stiffened up the price on carnations and, with the many receptions taking place, trade in general has assumed a more healthy tone.

A number of down-town stores, after a brief existence, have closed, leaving the field to the old guard, Coombs, Spear, Welch, McClunie and Munsell.

The South End Greenhouses, formerly run by W. A. Power, have been re-opened by a son of J. G. D. Newton, of the Park Street Greenhouses.

John Coombs made liberal use of paint last summer, making his rose houses look like new. A look over his store shows everything in shape and from the stock of paper boxes, a heavy trade is anticipated.

Genial Joe McManus, at Spear's, is authority on the correct thing in color, style, make-up, etc. "Yes, madam, this is the very latest and highly exclusive." So it goes, as there is no appeal from Joe's decision.

A visit to Mr. Welch's place found everything span clean, although it was learned that he was at home sick.

L. A. Clinton, Director of the Storrs Agricultural Experiment Station, this state, has called attention to the deceptive character of much of the literature on ginseng culture. The article strikes at the root of a matter that has long seemed to need scientific investigation.

The past week seems to bear out the prophecy that the tide has turned. The prices quoted above confirm it. Clear cold weather, scarcity of the best quality stock and the brilliancy of the opera season have combined to put new life in the cut flower trade. Thanksgiving arrived at a most opportune time and unless all signs fail the clouds have certainly rolled by.

Cold weather, with reduced production, has stiffened demand and prices. Chrysanthemums are about over. Carnations are scarce and good roses not in excess of demand. Monday night the first german of the season made a heavy call for choice stock.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Thanksgiving brought out a very good trade for the wholesale houses. There was all kinds of stock, even carnations coming in much larger quantities than was anticipated. But the majority of the retailers say that business was not what it might have been. There was not much call for high grade stock. Medium mums and ordinary roses and carnations sold best. The flower market was loaded with cheap flowers of all kinds and the general report is that trade was poor.

Since Thanksgiving the demand has dropped off a great deal and business is only fair. Chrysanthemums of all kinds are scarce, as many growers have cut out their entire stock and others have but a few late ones left. Carnations are scarce and prices rule high. Roses are about equal to the demand. American Beauties are plentiful. Violets have been doing fine all this season, but now the demand for them is light. There is a good demand for valley and some fine stock is to be had. A few narcissi are seen now and then and they sell readily at $4 per 100.

Notes.

Chas. Jones, of the Walnut Hills Floral Bazaar, had the most elaborate wedding decoration that has been seen in this city for many years. White chrysanthemums were the main flowers used, with great quantities of wild smilax and many large decorative plants.

Ben George is raising some whiskers in true English style. Ben is an Englishman by birth and now, for the first time, he is showing his ability to cultivate the distinctly English facial adornment.

Theo. Bock was a visitor and appeared none the worse for his illness following the Indianapolis show.

The next show to be given by the Florists' Society will be devoted almost exclusively to roses and will be held Saturday, February 13. Besides the regular premium list, the silver and bronze medals of the S. A. F. will also be competed for. C. J. OHMER.

DES MOINES, IA.

Jottings About Town.

We took a ten minute layoff the other day at J. F. Marshall's and found him and his men staking and tying up carnations and, incidentally, disbud-ding. His stock is looking good, some fine Lawson, good Crane and splendid McGowan. He still holds to old Lizzie because he can take more dollars from the same amount of space than with anything he has found yet. And when other growers who have thrown it out see his, they say: "I would throw out some of my White Cloud and Hill and put in McGowan if I could grow them as you do." He also has some remarkably fine seedlings now in their second and third year.

We next stopped at Julius Ledig's, about one and one-half miles farther west. Here we found him, as usual, doing two men's work. His stock is looking well for the time planted. He moved his houses from the flooded district the past summer and has a much better location now. He has three houses, I think, 16x100, 18x100 and 20x100.

We then called at a new florist's store at Seventh and Locust streets, where Miss Lillian Anderson is prepared to furnish cut flowers and floral emblems. We wish her success.

Then we dropped in at the green-houses owned by A. Anderson, at Twenty-second and University avenue. He has leased his place to a couple of young men. The firm name is Lindgren & Lund. The boys are practical men and their roses show it. Here we saw some fine Bride, Ivory and Maid. Their chrysanthemums were extra fine and we saw some Merry Christmas that are good. They are carrying a general assortment of stock, besides a house of roses and one of carnations. Their palm house is looking good and ferns also, including Piersoni and Anna Foster. They are building another house 15x116.

We next stopped at Charles Brandt-man's. He has his new place looking well. His stock is in splendid condition. He grows an assortment of stock, also Bride, Golden Gate, Maid and Wootton roses and has planted quite a lot of bulbous stock. Charles is certainly improving his opportunities.

We had expected to call on John Lambert, and have him go with us to town and have a game at the bowling alley, but our ten minutes were up.

J. T. D. F.

OMAHA.

The trade for Thanksgiving week was all we could ask. The mums were cleaned out—and at good prices. Other stock is also first-class, roses particularly having made a wonderful improvement in the past two weeks. Social activity indicates a continuation of brisk trade and with fair weather there will be no halt from this section.

The branch store of A. Donaghue will be ready for occupancy this week. B.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

ZANESFIELD, O.—John Kinney, son of Israel Kinney, the nurseryman, died November 20 aged 25 years.

CONSTANTIA, N. Y.—Barnes & Royce have shipped nineteen cars of moss to the nurseries at Rochester, Newark and other towns.

It is reported that C. W. Ward has the only planting of peonies on the St. Louis World's Fair grounds. His stock was planted last spring.

JOHN C. SHAW, of the Rochester Nursery Co., Rochester, N. Y., has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his wife, who died November 27.

THE forty-eighth annual convention of the Illinois State Horticultural Society will be held at Champaign, December 16 to 18, with many nurserymen in attendance.

THE fourteenth annual banquet to the gardeners of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, and invited florists, nurserymen and market gardeners will be held December 11.

OF shipments aggregating 10,000 fruit trees sent by outside firms to nurserymen at Tacoma, Wash. and vicinity, but 350 were rejected because of infection, which Inspector T. A. Warnock says is a new record for cleanliness.

THE pin oak, Quercus palustris, is slowly coming into its own; it is to be more largely used for street planting because of its many good qualities. There is a general opinion that it is a tree of slow growth, but this only applies to recently transplanted stock; after a year or two they will compare favorably in growth with any of the better class of shade trees.

ANOTHER park is contemplated for New York, of 4,000 acres, three times larger than the largest park within the city and five times the size of Central park. The land is on Staten island, reaching from the beach to the highlands in the center of the island and commanding a glorious view of the city and the sea. Its cost is estimated at a million and a half, a nominal sum, when the $5,000,000 paid for Central park is considered. It is proposed to call it Green park in memory of the father of Greater New York.

VISITED ST. LOUIS.—Wm. A. Peterson, Chicago; S. Mendelsohn Meehan, Philadelphia.

F. S. PHOENIX, the Bloomington nurseryman, has been re-elected secretary of the Central Illinois Horticultural Society.

It is announced that Harlan P. Kelsey and Irving T. Guild have formed a partnership for the practice of landscape architecture, with offices at 6 Beacon street, Boston.

WE cannot afford to get along without THE REVIEW.—J. W. MUNK, & SONS, Bellville, Ohio.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. B. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 29th annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

VISITED ST. PAUL.—J. B. Agnew, of Agnew, Cal.

THE Leonard Seed Co. is putting twenty more bean picking machines in its Chicago warehouse.

A CHICAGO firm, not in the seed business, has been fortunate enough to get a carload of sweet corn from somewhere in Nebraska.

IN a circular to the trade the Western Seed and Irrigation Co. names many advantages its new location at Fremont, Neb., will give it.

L. L. MAY & Co. have their catalogue well under way and it will be issued by December 15, several weeks in advance of the usual time.

ALBERT DICKINSON Co., Chicago, has bought a piece of property which makes its holding at Clark and Sixteenth streets 79x629 feet.

D. L. SLOAN, of D. L. Sloan & Son, Palo Alto, Cal., on his way home from the east, took in the International Live Stock show at Chicago, Tuesday.

VISITED PHILADELPHIA:—C. R. Kimberlin, Santa Clara, Cal.; D. L. Sloan, Palo Alto, Cal.; Mr. Bradstreet, of the Cleveland Seed Co., Cape Vincent, N. Y.

THE seedsman's life is full of trouble: Some of the cucumber growers who disposed of their crops a month ago at what was then considered a glorious price are not friendly now to the dealers who bought from them.

A QUART of cucumber seed when weighed after milling will ordinarily go sixteen ounces full. This year's crop in most cases will not weigh better than twelve ounces to the quart.

THIS week at Waterloo, Neb., the wholesale growers at that place are offering $8 per 100 pounds for Evergreen and other late varieties of sweet corn to the farmers who have crops that were not contracted.

SANTA PAULA, CAL.—Bodger & Son have shipped eight tons of tomato seed and thirteen car loads of Lima beans. The firm is shipping considerable quantities of Lima beans to New Zealand, where they have a representative this season.

WHEN a thirteen-acre patch of cucumbers, which, right up to the cutting, gave as good a promise of a full yield as anything ever could, pans out only 400 pounds of seed it is small wonder that prices are high and per cent of deliveries low.

THE Missouri Valley Seed Co., St. Joseph, Mo., filed articles of incorporation November 21, capital paid up $10,000; 100 shares, of which A. G. Samuels, former proprietor, holds forty-nine shares; Walter Cash, one share, and L. O. Weakly, fifty shares. Mr. Samuels continues in active management of the business.

RECENT advices from Colorado cucumber seed growers is to the effect that the crop will be much shorter than predicted some three weeks ago. They claim the seed is turning out badly and that a great many flat seeds without germs have developed. That at present no fixed percentage for delivery can be named.

THE U. S. General Appraisers have again ruled that millet seed in its natural condition is free of duty as grass seed "not specially provided for"; this in the protest of J. C. Edwards against the collector at San Francisco. A similar protest by the Dickinson Co. was sustained some years ago and has since been the guide for the Department.

THE United States Supreme Court granted a writ of certiorari yesterday to the First National Bank and H. W. Rogers & Brothers in the legal fight over seeds placed in the National Storage Company's warehouse by Alexander Rodgers. Loans amounting to $17,000 were made by those to whom the writ was granted. The case will now go to the Supreme Court.

THIS GEM IS FROM IOWA.

When the frost had hit the Punkin,
There was Sweet Corn in the shock,
And the grower's heart went hunkin',
'Cause he had no clothes to hunk.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

THE KEW BELLADONNA.—The superiority of this form, of Amaryllis Belladonna over the other two, viz., the type and that known as blanda, may now be seen at Kew, where all three are flowering in the border against the south wall of the orchid house. There are twelve flowers open on one scape of the Kew variety, whereas on the others not more than five can be found. The flowers are larger and the color a richer shade of rosy-crimson than in any other Belladonna. The origin of this fine plant is doubtful. It is supposed to be the result of a cross between Brunsvigia Josephina and a Belladonna lily; but Mr. Baker, after carefully examining the plant, was of opinion that it was nothing more than an exceptionally fine variety of A. Belladonna. The cross between these two has since been carefully made at Kew, and the progeny will soon be old enough to flower; we shall then see if there is anything in the story of the origin of the Kew Belladonna. It is certain, at any rate, that this cross can be made.

IPOMOEA RUBRO-COERULEA.—This lovely convolvulus is sometimes seen in hot-houses, but rarely in the open ground. Being a native of southern Mexico, it requires to be started in a warm temperature; but when the plants have attained a height of eighteen inches to two feet they may well be used for the decoration of the conservatory, or even planted against a sunny wall in the open. There are over 300 species of ipomoeas, the majority of which are not in cultivation, but none exceeds in beauty the subject of this note. The large flowers, from three inches to four inches in diameter, are of a lovely pale-blue tint, and are rivaled in hue by no other plant in the open garden. The plant is an annual, but will continue to flower under glass protection, where sufficient heat is afforded, until December or January. In the open its season of beauty is naturally of shorter duration; but there is no reason why it should not be used to ornament warm walls through August and September. The present summer has been exceptionally wet, dull and windy, yet for the past five weeks this species has afforded a charming picture on a south wall, where its twining growths ascend perpendicular wires to a height of four feet, and charm beholders with numbers of pale-blue flowers. The plants are put out in rich and porous soil in mid-July, when the first flower-buds are just formed. They are grown singly in 4½-inch pots, and care should be taken not to disturb the ball in planting. Few are aware what beauty they miss by not employing this lovely annual convolvulus for affording color to southern walls with its clear blue flowers in late summer and early autumn.

KNIPHOFIA RUFA.

Several species of the red hot poker plant have been introduced from South Africa recently, including that under notice, which hails from the Orange River Colony. I should not recommend it for those who believe only in big heads, such as are produced by the common K. aloides, but it nevertheless has a beauty of its own, and bears its stems much more gracefully than the heavy-headed ones, says a writer in the Gardening World. The spikes vary from two and one-half feet to three feet in height, and bear a raceme of flowers rather sparsely placed over the stem, so as to form a sort of open spike. These flowers are dusky red at first, but they change after expansion to a clear bright yellow, except the short lobes at the mouth, which are nearly white. The three-edged leaves are narrower than those of the common species, and of a light glaucous green. It is well worthy of cultivation for late summer and early autumn effect.

PANDANUS VEITCHII.

To have well colored plants of this useful stove subject it is necessary to keep up a stock of young plants. As a rule, when they become old they lose the variegation which is their chief characteristic, says the Gardening World. Those that have become green or too large to be of service may now be destroyed, and the highly colored suckers pulled off from the base, taking pains to retain roots where possible. Insert these singly in small pots; a suitable compost consists of three-fifths good friable loam to one each of peat and leaf-soil, adding some nodules of charcoal, silver sand, a little bone-meal, and a handful of lime. Plunge in a frame or propagating pit, and when well rooted place on a light shelf and grow on gently all the winter. No repotting should be performed until the following February, when they may be shifted on into a size larger pot and grown on in heat freely. A fruitful source of green foliage may be attributed in great measure to over-potting and over-watering.

PEWAUKEE, WIS.—Frank Scholl will embark in the greenhouse business on Ormsby street, this town affording a good opening for such an enterprise.

I THINK it only right and just to encourage you in your work of editing the best florists' paper in America, by saying that if I could only afford one paper it would be the REVIEW.—A. J. BOOTHMAN, Adams, Mass.

PLANT NOTES.

Japanese Stock.

The season will soon be at hand when large shipments of trees and shrubs will be received through the San Francisco custom house from Japan. The taste of the public has undergone somewhat of a change in the past ten years regarding Japanese stock, and such articles as fancy leaved maples, cedars, single camellias, junipers and azaleas are no longer in great demand at fancy prices in this section of the country. We depend upon Japan, however, for cheap camellias, rhaps, cycas, aspidistras, sword-ferns, fern baskets and several varieties of hardy palms.

Before laws regarding scale bugs and injurious insects were so strictly enforced as they are at present it was almost impossible to get anything that was not infested with some sort of a bug. It took a long time to convince the Japanese nurserymen that they had to keep their stock clean, and many consignments were burned by order of the local inspectors before we were able to get stock in good condition.

The Japanese camellias have to a great extent superseded the European varieties. Although they do not have such a variety of shades, especially in the light colors, many of them are very beautiful and succeed very well as garden plants when the situation they are planted in suits them. All they require is heavy soil, good drainage and plenty of water in the summer season. Many people try to grow them as pot plants, but unless they are watched very carefully they do not thrive well. Plants can be landed in San Francisco, 18 to 24 inches high, full of flower buds, in assorted colors, at from $20 to $25 per hundred.

Japanese azaleas are not to be compared with Azalea indica, and although the single white varieties are very fine and very hardy the other colors are not so desirable. Aspidistras are grown in the open ground in Japan very largely and are sold by the leaf instead of according to the size of the clump. It is almost impossible to have them delivered here so that the leaves will be perfect enough to make a salable plant when potted and it is generally necessary to keep them over a year before they are really good.

Cycas revoluta is perfectly hardy here and if it was not of such slow growth it would make an admirable garden palm, but it is handled principally in pots and is not so hardy as a kentia, that is it will not stand as much rough usage. The rhaps is also hardy and succeeds well with us in sheltered situations. It is of very slow growth but large specimens are very effective. The livistona is a very desirable palm and perfectly hardy, as are also several varieties of chamærops. We have acclimated most of the desirable varieties of Japanese bamboos and we find that they do as well here as they do in the native climate.

Tree peonies are very beautiful but not very satisfactory as garden plants. Fern baskets have not sold well for several years, although at one time they were in great demand. Japanese deciduous magnolias do not sell well and of late years they have been sending us large quantities of grafted Magnolia grandiflora—the most popular variety here.

I am inclined to think that business was not as good during Thanksgiving week this year as it was in the corresponding week a year ago. We have been having beautiful, bright days for the past week and this, coupled with warm nights, has brought into market an abundance of flowers, and prices were low. Violets seem to be scarce; in fact, they are the only flower that was not plentiful. We had plenty of violets last year at this time, but they seem to be slow in blooming this season, and $1.25 per dozen bunches was the ruling price. Long-stemmed American Beauties were in scant supply but other varieties of roses were plentiful enough and of very good quality. Brides and Maids sold at from 50 cents

Carnations have advanced about 25 cents per dozen on fancy varieties and other sorts about 15 cents per dozen during the past two weeks. Chrysanthemums are plentiful but are not offered in such abundance as they were a few weeks ago. The outdoor flowers can be had at from $2 to $4 per hundred and the indoor flowers at from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen. Bonaffon and Mrs. Jerome Jones are the varieties being cut from under glass at this time. Red Christmas berries are coming into market from the interior and they are handled in large quantities by some of the florists and by the street vendors.

WICHITA, KAN.

The Market.

The Thanksgiving trade was fairly satisfactory and held its own, with a slight gain over last year, which was a record maker for that day. Good chrysanthemums sold well and at fair prices. Beauty roses were also good property, with a fair demand for common roses, carnations and violets. Good chrysanthemum plants also sold well. There was not much advance in prices on cut flowers and indications are that the buyers on this day expect to get a good deal for their money.

Notes.

F. Keuchenmeister has resigned his position as park superintendent, giving as his reason that he needed all his time for his own business in his greenhouses in Riverside. His strong point this year is carnations.

C. A. Rose put a new roof on his greenhouse this fall and has added a nice wall case to his store on Main street.

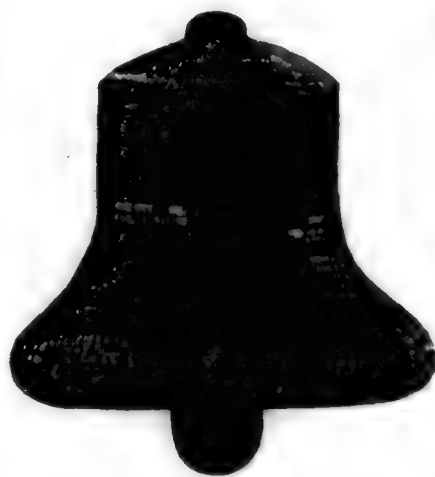

C. P. Mueller is tending strictly to business, with a good lot of carnations and general stock. Mr. Mueller, so it is reported, contemplates extensive changes and additions the coming summer.

The Hersey Greenhouses, of the North End, were "in it" this season with some good mums and say that it pays to grow good stock.

Harry L. Hunt & Co. is the sign in the window of a new store on one of the best corners in the city, sharing the room with the United States Express Company. Mr. Hunt has been connected with the trade in Wichita for more than fifteen years and for the last four years has carried on a business at his own greenhouses near College Hill.

W. H. Culp & Co. find their new location on Market street, to which they moved a year ago, very satisfactory, but would respectfully remark that it is no fun to move a greenhouse plant, even if it is only across the alley. They had a good lot of chrysanthemums this season, having probably the most shapely, even sized, salable plants ever grown in Wichita. Mr. Culp has built himself a new modern ten-room residence, into which he has moved lately.

UNIONTOWN, PA.—Mrs. Sarah A. Barton died November 27 at the advanced age of 81 years. She was a most estimable woman and the mother of R. S. and W. R. Barton, the florists.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The Market.

Thanksgiving was notable in some respects. A week in advance of the day itself prices stiffened, enough flowers could hardly be obtained to supply retail trade and a steady, heavy shipping demand, that was better than last year. The Saturday preceding shippers bought up what stock was available at home, and one firm is known to have had nearly 1,500 carnations shipped in from Chicago and had not a scrap left at night. The market is now as active as could be desired.

Roses are about equal to the demand but carnations are scarce, especially red, white being the easiest to obtain. American Beauties are scarce.

Chrysanthemums are about over and we heave a sigh of relief and make a memorandum of the varieties we must grow for next season. Violets are good and in fair supply. As a whole, business was about the same in volume as last year. Prices as follows: Roses, $1 to $1.50 per doz.; A. B.'s, $2 to $4 per doz.; carnations, 50 to 75 cents per doz. Some of the small greenhouses were retailing carnations at 35 cents. The weather was moderately cold and fine and retail trade in harmony with it.

Smith Bros. have sold their greenhouses at John Ball Park to a Mr. Tuinisma, an employe of the Standard Oil Co. here; he has engaged his brother to run it.

TORONTO.

The Market.

With the increased demand for cut flowers and the decreased supply, stock has been gradually rising in price and present prospects point to a big shortage in all lines for Christmas. The great number of novelties in the shape of bells, etc., that have been introduced this year, have made it a conundrum as to whether the demand for cut stuff will be as large as formerly. However, we are sure of one thing; that the supply will not be equal to former years and no doubt everything will be sold up.

A number of large decorations have been put up this last week by our leading florists and quite a quantity of southern smilax has been used to good effect. There seems to be a nice demand for it when we can get it good, but the trouble has always been that being so far away from where it is gathered, the bulk of it has arrived in anything but good condition.

The Show.

The chrysanthemum show that was held under the auspices of the Toronto Horticultural Association was a huge success. While the exhibition was not as large as has been held in the old Horticultural pavilion, yet it was large enough to pack St. George's hall so that the space for spectators was small. In chrysanthemums Miller & Sons, of Bracondale, took all the firsts. In roses the Dale estate was the only exhibitor and put up a fine display. In carnations things were pretty evenly divided between J. H. Dunlop and the Dale Estate, while Wm. Fendley, of Brampton, and C. Turp, of this city, came in for a few premiums. The display of orchids was exceptionally good, the prizes going to Exhibition park, Wm. Hill and Manton Bros. D. J.

AVONDALE, PA.

E. J. Cloud's place is in fine shape and promises a splendid crop for Christmas. He has a house 24x60 containing 800 plants of mignonette which is a sight. The growth is something remarkable and at least 5,000 spikes will be ready for Christmas. The carnations also look good and the smilax and peas, all in the same house, are all right. There are 500 calla lilies in 6-inch pots. They have made a wonderful growth and each shows three or four flowers or buds. Mr. Cloud says that last year his callas averaged nearly twenty-five flowers per plant. When a neighbor asked him how he did it his answer was, "Dum' luck."

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

As far as I can learn everybody in the trade here was well pleased with Thanksgiving. Trade came at the last moment, however, but few advance orders being placed. Stock was pretty well cleaned up, though there was enough to go around. The demand for Beauties and violets was exceptionally good. Mums sold well and carnations, as usual, were prime favorites.

Green and holly are now in and some of the larger stores are beginning to don holiday attire. Holly seems plentiful and of good quality, but bouquet green is very scarce.

The weather is now favorable and a big Christmas cut is being anticipated by the growers. December is the dark and cloudy month and every day of sunshine means dollars to the growers.

Notes.

L. L. May & Co. had a rather unique window for Thanksgiving, the center feature of which was a plump turkey gobbler made of galax leaves and mums. This was designed and executed by Gust Colberg, the manager of the retail store.

A. S. Swanson has a full house of poinsettias, grown to perfection; just right for the Christmas trade.

Visitors during the week were J. McHutchison, of New York, and L. P. Lord, of Owatonna. X. Y. Z.

CHESTER, PA.

The arbitrators have given an award of $8,000 for the minor children of Thomas F. Delahunt, the florist, against the United Telephone Company. Mr. Delahunt was killed in his greenhouse on April 9, 1902, by a shock of electricity while he was answering a call at the telephone, and it was shown that a wire of the defendant company was crossed with an electric light cable. The company will appeal the case.

I have used your FUMIGATING POWDER for some years and I have always found it first-class; there is no danger of it killing anything except the green fly, which it does with dispatch. I never use anything else for insecticide, nor do I wish anything better.
Yours truly,

Yours respectfully,

BAYSIDE, N. Y.
I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.

Yours truly,

DENVER, COLO.

The Market.

Thanksgiving day here was warm and pleasant, more like a summer day, and all plants could be delivered without covering of any kind. Take it on the whole, trade was about the same as last year, some establishments reporting better trade and others not so good. Still there did not seem to be much left over in cut flowers. Of plants there were more than the demand. Chrysanthemums, as it was the winding up of the season, were hardly up to the standard, but sold at $3 to $4 per dozen. Of roses and carnations there was a good supply. Roses brought $1.50 to $3 per dozen. Beauties $5 to $10, carnations 75 cents to $1.50 and some extra Enchantress brought more. In plants Begonia Lorraine, cyclamens and poinsettias took the lead.

Notes.

Scott & Reynolds have leased a store in the Masonic building for the month of December, after which they will remove to the store at Sixth and Champu.

The Park Floral Co. is getting its new store at Seventeenth and Broadway fixed up elegantly and expects to open soon.

E. Glauber, of Montclair, who has his rose houses mainly planted with Mme. Chatenay, made an elegant display in one of the most conspicuous windows of the city on November 28. The entire window was filled with Chatenay roses, with a card stating who they were grown by and that they could be purchased of any flower dealer in the city.

THORN.

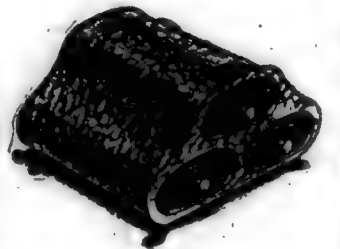

CHICOPEE FALLS, Mass.—E. R. Macomber says cut flowers were in good demand for Thanksgiving. Chrysanthemums have been in good supply and sold well, but are nearly past. Carnations are doing well.

DETROIT, MICH.—Some of the leading local florists are using a very neat, light but strong extension plant stand manufactured by W. H. Anderson & Sons, of this city. Breitmeyer, Sullivan, Taepke, Schroeter, in fact all those who do any amount of decorating have them and find them very useful. The manufacturer casts on each stand the name of the buyer, when the order is for one dozen or more stands.

INSURANCE of your PLANTS FROM FREEZING in cold weather may be obtained at trifling cost if you will use a

LEHMAN WAGON HEATER

There is no danger of fire; no smoke, dirt or gases to injure the plants. They burn Lehman Coal which costs less than half a cent per hour. 200,000 Lehman Heaters are in use which clearly shows they have merit. Florists everywhere use and recommend them. Have you one? THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

A JOURNAL FOR FLORISTS, SEEDSMEN AND NURSERYMEN.

CHICAGO AND NEW YORK, DECEMBER 10, 1903.

Novelties In Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bratt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

HERE NEVER WAS a time in recent years when there were too many good flowers for Christmas. Almost always there are too few. But cut flower buyers may rest assured that there is no other source of supply where one can be more certain of getting what he wants. If seasonable flowers are to be had in Chicago, they are to be had at Amling's.

We shall have large supplies
for Christmas

No doubt of that, but just what we can do on late orders it is impossible to foretell. That's why we urge early correspondence; give us an insight as to your needs. It will be to mutual advantage.

But if you find yourself running short, don't hesitate; wire us and we will help you out if stock is to be had in Chicago.

We have the cuts of some of the largest growers for this market and our force is ample to handle every order promptly.

Thanking you for the past patronage and trusting for its continuance, we shall in the future as we have in the past, do everything in our power to merit same.

FLORIST.....

CHRISTMAS STOCK.

With Christmas only two weeks away, no time is to be lost in preparing stock for the great rush which is sure to come. It is necessary to plan ahead, for supplies of such stock as is most in demand for Christmas gifts is not to be picked up and thrown together on Christmas eve, when it comes time to fill your orders. With plant arrangements, holly wreaths, etc., it is possible to work up a great deal of the stock several days in advance of delivery, and it is a good plan to have some of the arrangements ready for exhibition in the store a couple of weeks in advance of the holiday; it will aid materially in booking advance orders, which is a great help, for nearly always the last couple of days bring more customers than can be waited on satisfactorily. By all means get your orders as early as possible; large retailers who have tried it find it pays to mail to customers a neatly printed card pointing out the advantages of buying before the rush.

One of the items for which there is always sale if offered, is the well made wreath, not the common, plain immortelle wreath, but such a one as that shown in the accompanying illustration. It is made of red immortelles, to be sure, but the addition of the broad crimson ribbon, the dried sumach flowers, the bitter-sweet berries and the Hartford fern is what gives it the winning touch. Many variations of this wreath may be devised with a little thought and ingenuity.

Of course, the plain holly wreath is one of the indispensable articles. You may buy them or make them; probably most do the latter. Holly is fairly well berried this year, but it is usually the case that at least part of the stock is found none too well furnished in this respect. Buy a case of the red Christmas berries and supply the deficiency, as shown in one of the accompanying illustrations. Furthermore, the red winter berries and a few holly leaves work up into a very popular dinner table center piece. Add a bow of holly red ribbon to the wreath and it will attract many who would think it too plain otherwise.

Nearly every retailer who has what can be called a first-class trade finds Begonia Gloire de Lorraine the Christmas plant par excellence. It lends itself to many uses and makes up well in arrangements which can be sold from $3 up. Probably in no way can a more attractive article be prepared than by placing a plant in a handle basket. If the basket is showy of itself, a ribbon is all that need be added, but if a plainer receptacle is used it may be wrapped in Porto Rican matting. The more poorly shaped plants in one's stock can be used to good advantage in this way.

The araucaria is a salable Christmas plant, particularly with tasteful embellishment. Porto Rican matting of varied color should be in every florist's stock of supplies and the red shades harmonize with the green of the pine. Some decorators also weave in red ribbon, with a bow, but to the writer's taste this is going to an undesirable extreme. Azaleas, too, seem most popular with the pot wrapped in matting or crepe paper. Don't use so much paper that the plant is half concealed and its bination. The Christmas pepper is another plant affording the same opportunity for inexpensive embellishment and large sale.

Good specimens of the Otaheite orange are good sellers to the better class of trade and with them pot covers of many sorts may be used; the gilt basket and ribbon of a harmonious shade are, perhaps, most frequently used. The ericas are largely used in the east, but are not often seen in the west, where the development of the holiday plant industry has only just begun.

At the Christmas season cut flowers must be of good quality to be salable, for the call is almost always for first-class stock, sent out loose; that is, in boxes. The supply houses offer a great variety of fancy boxes, hampers, etc., which can be handled very profitably at this season. And baskets of choice cut flowers will also be found to take well if shown or suggested, where the

The cyclamen is a plant which can be sold in large numbers because it can be offered at a moderate price. Many styles of baskets may be used effectively as receptacles for these. The gilded wicker basket, red ribbon and the green foliage make a happy com-average customer will not consider a wreath or other made up piece. The arrangement of carnations illustrated in this issue is a canoe-shaped basket of willow, filled with the light pink Enchantress on one side and with the darker pink Marquis on part of the other, the two varieties being mixed on the handle. Asparagus was used for green and some carnation foliage and quite a number of buds. There is a bow of green ribbon on the lower front.

The arrangement of roses is a low basket with a high handle of grape-wood, filled with a combination of President Carnot and Mme. Chatenay, a number of which were well open, with many buds interspersed, the two shades of pink blending nicely. There was little foliage used other than that of the roses and a few sprays of Asparagus plumosus. On one side of the handle is a bow of green ribbon, of a shade to match the foliage.

Violets are commonly sold in small fancy boxes or baskets, but where something out of the ordinary is wanted small high-handled baskets may be used, with ribbon.

Go through your order books for previous years and list the names of customers who bought Christmas trees. Call them up on the telephone and you will likely get their order again, or, if this is too big a task, a good way is to send a printed postal card inviting the customer to call and select his tree and have it reserved for him.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Greens.

A feature of our business at the holiday season of late years has been the "green" business. It has grown till it takes up a lot of time and we must either make up these wreaths and garlands ourselves or buy them. Some can be bought to advantage, while others are difficult to get in the right quality. Having these wreaths and wreathing in sufficient quantity, and kept so that they will be in good order for Christmas eve, exposed to very severe weather. The cases should be stored in a cool shed. A dry heat will shrivel it up. A cool, rather moist cellar would be the ideal place. Use the short stuff for making wreaths and the good branches and sprays for selling as 50 cents' worth, or a dollar's worth, or two dollars' worth, for there is a great demand for it in that way.

If you don't have this cool cellar for storing the loose branches, and more par-them, to keep the light away. Don't put down more than two layers of the wreaths, or the weight will flatten out the lower ones. Some make these holly wreaths with ground pine on one side and holly on the other. We never have demand for any but all holly. Get your local wire worker to supply you with the wire frames for the wreaths; he will supply them as cheap and neater than you can make them.

Laurel Wreathing.

The so-called mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia, is by all odds the nicest material for wreathing. It is a pretty green, clean, does not drop and has not the cheap look of the ground pine wreathing. Use it in all decorations where you can. It is perhaps double the cost of the ground pine wreathing, but it looks it and is worth it. Here is an article, though, that you can buy by the yard, made up, rather cheaper than you can buy the sprays and make it up yourself.

We are always asked for some laurel wreathing "extra heavy," and this we have to make up for the occasion, for what you buy is not good enough. This beautiful shrub adorns the bleak and snowy slopes of our Allegheny mountains and no amount of frost hurts it. A cold frame, with the light excluded, is a very good place for it, but don't make too great a thickness of it, for it flattens out in the sardine style and then it's anything but ornamental. That is the only trouble with the wreathing you buy; it needs to be ruffled up and shaken out.

Bouquet Green.

I suppose the old ground pine, which has several aliases, will come next in importance. We all know that it is a carpet to some parts of our most northern states and is as hardy as an icicle, but it browns up quickly when used in a warm room. Even while in crates unpacked some cloth or covering of some sort should be thrown over it to keep the exposed outsides from losing its fresh green color. We used to soak the bunches for an hour or two before making into wreathing. That we found wrong. To dip the bunches in water for a minute or two will make the sprays pliable and easier to work, but if overwet it will all the quicker turn brown or black after being made up. With us, about one-tenth as many ground pine wreaths are sold as holly.

The wreathing that is made up by tens of thousands of yards and sold to the florists for them to retail is altogether too thin and dried up an article for our use and we much prefer to make the wreathing and then store it away in some frame or very cool shed, but always covered, so that the light and air will be excluded as much as possible.

The above three materials are the principal things for our holiday decorations. There are other things used in a small way. The beautiful leaves of the Magnolia grandiflora are very ornamental on small branches, but not often seen.

Wild Smilax.

There is nothing for me to say about that most decorative of all hardy climbers, the southern smilax. It is in season from October until April and you buy it by the case when you want it. The merest novice can tack this up and it can't be otherwise than graceful. It's will require no little thought and management.

The Care of Holly.

Holly is, perhaps, our most important article in this line. It should never be ticularly the wreaths when they are made up, perhaps a week ahead of time, then we have found they keep very well beneath a bench in a cool greenhouse, laying coarse paper on the ground, to keep the wreaths clean, and newspaper over something like the beautiful Asparagus plumosus in this respect, only the smilax is invaluable in the large hall, while the plumosus is at home in the drawing-room.

Mistletoe.

Don't forget a few dollars' worth of imported mistletoe. There are no "privileges" allowed with the native species. I don't know that the mistletoe, which has such charming associations, lends extra bliss to the exercise under the bough when well berried, but certain it is that it comes to us very berryless. The berries are in the bottom of the case and there is no harm in your gumming them on again. It won't be seen. If you buy ten dollars' worth of mistletoe you will, perhaps, only get your money back, but you won't do that if you leave it in the case and let every boy you have maul it over when wanting to select a fifty-cent or dollar spray. Unpack and sort it and put a price on each group, so that you can readily pick up what your customer wants.

The Christmas tree, in large cities, at least, is no worry to the florist. Car loads come in and are handled by the market people, and the people go there for them. I don't know of any novelty that is likely to be the fashion this holiday time. Holly and the scarlet immortal bells and electric lights are sure to be very prominent in Christmas decorations and if you get a decoration of that sort the poinsettia is sure to be asked for, as it is now known in many cities as the Christmas flower.

VIOLETS.

Seasonable Treatment.

Our continued cold weather for the past few weeks has been good for violets, although we have been without snow in our section until last week, when we had a fall of light snow about six inches deep. This will be an improvement as regards firing and keeping frost out of the houses, and it also makes the houses lighter these dark days.

Your violets should be looking their nicest now, else there is no money in growing them. You must take especial care to keep them thoroughly cleaned up, having no old or dying leaves in the crown, but as I have said before, do not put any careless or inexperienced help at this, at any rate not till a good deal later in the season, for if you do they will surely snap off more pennies (buds) than they save by cleaning up the plants. They are so sure to catch on the stems and then they go like the roosters that we used to fight when children.

Don't fail to keep the air fresh and pure; change the air every day, even if you have to keep heat on while doing it in order to keep out frost. Of course storms, etc., may prevent, but as a rule do so. Watch out for sow bugs, spot and aphids, both black and green. Do not let any of these get a foothold under any circumstances, for they are all fatal to flowers, that which we are looking for.

We never gave a real good comparative trial of single crowns versus good medium sized clumps till this winter, for we always thought we preferred the latter, and we still have no reason to change our opinion. I do not mean by this a large, overgrown clump, but a good medium sized one which will provide you with more leaves for the plant to breathe through and still leave you some to pick, and also give you more blooms and better ones. Care and constant vigilance are large factors in successful violet growing, although these do not always insure success, as nearly all growers find out to their sorrow sooner or later.

Araucaria in Pot Covered with Porto Rican Matting.

Keep close watch now for your choice pedigreed stock and mark same to propagate from. Choose only those clumps that are giving you the best, long-stemmed large flowers and a large crop for the holidays, as it always pays, as far as possible, to breed up in plants as well as stock, and needs as much time, also, if one is to make a success of it.

Watch out with care for the watering until the days get longer and brighter, when you can water more carelessly with less bad effect than now, if you must be careless at any time.

Propagation.

As the propagating season is again approaching, we should begin to get everything in readiness so that there may be no drawbacks to hamper that most important work. The propagating house should claim our first attention. The benches should be looked over and any necessary repairs made, pipes tested and ventilators adjusted. The benches should have a good coating of hot lime wash to help destroy fungus and insect eggs and the house should get a thorough fumigating.

The propagating medium, whether sand or coke, should be secured while the weather is open, and in sufficient quantity. The question of which is the best material for this purpose is still an open one, but where clean, sharp sand is available there need be no grumble on this score. Clean sand possesses no nutritive qualities which can cause decomposition and as a medium for retaining moisture in sufficient quantity for this purpose without souring it is nearly perfect. This should be laid on the bench to a depth of five inches and then watered. When partly dry it should be pounded quite firm and made of even depth all over. This will make the depth of the sand something like four inches.

The cuttings should be inserted in straight lines about one and a half inches apart and one inch between the cuttings. Beauties will require much more room, as they do not like crowding. The heel of the cuttings should be at a uniform depth of an inch and a half in the sand and, with other conditions right, they will all form roots in about the same period of time.

The selection of proper wood for propagating is one of the fundamental elements of success. A thorough knowledge of what is best, with care and patience in selecting being really essential, this duty should never be entrusted to any but the most experienced. We frequently see whole batches of cuttings taken indiscriminately, small underwood and stout pithy flower stems, and while these will form roots, they never can make thrifty plants and the grower who uses such methods is courting failure. Good, stout, well ripened blind wood with short joints will root more uniformly and make, with careful handling, as good stock as can be desired. The wood should not be allowed to stand long in water before being made and put into the sand, as this causes that condition known as "water heart."

A well sharpened knife is essential in the heel of the cutting and two above ground.

After being inserted in the sand they should be thoroughly watered, to settle the sand around the heel and stem, and shaded from the direct rays of the sun. They should not be allowed to remain shaded for any length of time after the sun ceases to shine on the bench, as this has a very weakening effect. The sand must never be allowed to become dry, a gentle syringing twice a day during very bright weather being nearly sufficient to supply their wants that way.

The temperature of the sand should never range higher than 62 nor lower than 60 degrees, if possible, while a house temperature of 48 to 52 degrees will be sufficient to check the breaking of the eyes and consequent growth during the process of root formation.

In from twenty-eight to thirty days the roots will be large enough for potting, and this should be done as soon as they are ready. Every day they stand in the sand after the roots are formed is a very severe check and the grower who has a pride in having the best will not let this condition long remain.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Christmas Stock.

Only two weeks after these notes go into print you and I will be working as hard as ever we can to take care of our share of the great Christmas trade. But since these notes are to go into the REVIEW'S Christmas number we will talk a little about how to handle the Christmas stock so as to give the most satisfaction to both yourself and your customers and their customers, if you happen to be a wholesale grower. The retail customer is always the important one to consider. It is he who causes either trouble or satisfaction, increased trade or diminished trade. If he is satisfied and pleased with a certain lot of flowers, the retailer is very apt to have an increased call for that kind, and the grower who supplied them is, of course, called upon to furnish more of them. You may be ever so well pleased yourself with a certain variety, or a certain lot of blooms, and your retailer may think they are just right, but if the one who buys them is not pleased with them your trade will suffer.

I am writing this especially for those who are in the habit of holding up their stock too long before a big day, or, in other words, pickling it. These men seem to imagine that if the blooms are in fair shape until they can ship them to the retailer, or until the retailer has sent them to his customer, that all is well. They do not care if the blooms are asleep or falling to pieces the next day after they are sent out, thereby cutting off their own nose. The cut flower grower can make no greater mistake than this. It is unfair and unjust and any man with judgment who cares for his business will not practice anything of the kind. The customer, after paying double and treble the regular price for the flowers, certainly has a right to expect them to keep as long as they do ordinarily. Is it any wonder that in so many cases he will fight shy of cut flowers, having been bitten a few times, and turn to the next best, the blooming plant? A bunch of fresh carnations or roses ought to last as long as the average Gloire de Lor-

open one, but where clean, sharp sand is available there need be no grumble on this score. Clean sand possesses no nutritive qualities which can cause decomposition and as a medium for retaining moisture in sufficient quantity for this purpose without souring it is nearly perfect. This should be laid on the successful cutting making. The cut should be made as short as possible, as the smaller and cleaner the cut, so much earlier will the wound heal and form a callus. The cuttings should also be as near of a size as possible. The ideal cutting for teas and hybrid teas should have at least three eyes, one at rairie, but such blooms as are too often sold will not do it.

I know as well as any one how hard it is to apparently give away money by selling a lot of stock for a normal price when it could be kept a week and forced onto an unsuspecting customer at double the price, but I have seen both ends of the business and all of us can readily reason out what it will eventually do to the man's business who practices pickling. A satisfied customer is the best advertisement. And a customer who will tell his friends that your flowers are invariably fresh and the best, is better than one who will have to admit that he has had old flowers a few times from you, but that you replaced them usually. As a grower you need your customer's confidence. He must know that whatever you send him is fresh and just what you represent it to be, and he will always be willing to pay the top price to the grower whose word is as good as his bond. You gain by it, even though at times you may think you could make a little more out of your cut of a few days.

Now, I do not mean to say that you should cut your crop and send it in right along, just as you do ordinarily. That would be foolish and I would not advise it, because we don't do it ourselves. The public demands at least five times as many flowers during the two days before Christmas as are needed on two ordinary days and it looks to the grower to supply them. This demand can be met, with the proper forethought and judgment, and with stock as good as is sent in at other times. With proper cutting and handling you can save practically all your cut of a week previous and have it in fine shape and by putting on a little extra heat you can increase your cut to nearly double what it is ordinarily.

Now, here is where the judgment comes in. Don't get the idea that if you can hold up 1,000 blooms in one week that you can save up 2,000 blooms in two weeks, and if a rise of 10 degrees in the temperature will increase the cut 100 per cent that an increase of 20 degrees will increase the cut 200 per cent. You can't keep carnation blooms two weeks and have them in good condition to sell. Your plants will stand about so much increase in temperature and will unfold their buds more rapidly on account of it and keep up the quality, but when you step over that limit, although unfolding will be more rapid, resulting in a few more blooms, the increase in the quantity will be more than offset by a decrease in quality. Perhaps you will not care so much if the blooms are not the very best; they will sell any way at Christmas. Yes, they will sell, but after Christmas poor blooms will not sell and if you overtax your plants for your Christmas cut they will surely produce a soft and inferior cut for some time after, and there is where you lose more than you made while you were playing your smart trick. Every year after the holidays we see and hear of a lot of weak stemmed stuff coming in that was ruined in just that way. And often it comes from growers whom we give credit for more judgment.

Just about two weeks before the day, you should commence to increase the heat by raising the temperature one degree each night for eight or ten nights. This will give the buds a chance to swell and unfold gradually and they will not feel it so much. A too sudden rise will cause them to make a jump and many calyxes will burst as a result. By having the temperature at the highest point three or four nights you will get all the blooms open that you can get without hurting your plants and the greatest increase in the cut will come just when you want to use it, and there will be less storing to do.

Cutting must be done somewhat closer, too, when the temperature is away up. A carnation bloom that hangs on a plant in a temperature 10 degrees higher than normal will ripen quickly and will begin to deteriorate all the more rapidly. Under the conditions the blooms should be cut just as soon as the petals are unfolded and kept in a room where the temperature is about 50 to 52 degrees. Not quite so cool as you ordinarily have your cut flower room. You don't want to stop them from developing, which they would do in a temperature of 45 degrees. In 50 to 52 degrees they will grow and develop into much finer blooms than they would on the plants while the temperature is away up.

A weak dose of liquid manure will help them and so will a sprinkling of lime or wood ashes. Give the first named when you begin to raise the temperature and the latter a week later. They should not suffer for water, either.

Now, another thing that does not belong to the growing end, but which is of much importance just the same. Don't hold your stock until the last minute. Consult your customer or selling agent freely and take his advice as to the best time to send in the stock. He knows better than you do just when it is wanted. Often a fine batch of stuff brings little more than a normal price just because it came in too late to meet the best demand.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Christmas Preparations.

Christmas, the time of heavy demand and good prices, is but two weeks away and close attention should be given to all the details that give to the product that high finish so quickly perceived and appreciated by critical buyers and, in consequence, of direct benefit to grower. While we would all desire an extra large quantity at this time, it is not advisable to give so much attention in this direction as to lose sight of quality. Prices will naturally be high and I am one of those who believe, in order to maintain the public's confidence and interest in the improvement of the carnation, that quality should compare favorably with price and it is for our interest to use our best efforts to produce a grade of goods which will encourage the custom and increase the use of the divine flower at holiday times.

If your plants were housed early they are no doubt firmly established and able to endure a little extra strain, but if for any reason the plants are not in the very best condition, dismiss all thoughts of their doing any extra work.

It is of great advantage to have each variety in a house by itself, particularly at this time, but as this is impossible with some growers, sound judgment must be exercised in selecting varieties to be grown together, and it is at this time of year that the results of keen observation should be jotted down for reference at housing time next year. I have always advocated the handling of stock early in the season with an eye to the future; that is, a substantial crop for the holidays and in seasonable fall weather the plan can be successfully carried out, but this fall has been so unusually warm that the best of calculations have been somewhat upset.

In many cases conditions are such that with continuous bright weather a large crop would be in, but it is safe to reckon on several dark days, during which progress will be slow, and under these circumstances most growers will raise the temperature a trifle, be the advice for or against the practice, so it is well to look into the effect produced upon the plants and provide means whereby this effect shall not be productive of bad results.

A reasonable increase of temperature accelerates growth, which in turn means increased consumption of moisture, the natural result being a condition of softness in the stems and leaves, perhaps barely perceptible but nevertheless the fact. To meet this condition apply a light coat of air-slaked lime to the soil several days previous to raising the temperature. This will aid in preserving the stiffness of stem, keep the soil sweet and render more available the increased amount of plant food needed, for it must be remembered that extra work calls for extra food, and while this could be furnished by the application of liquid manure, I would not advise its use at this time and under the circumstances; besides, there should be sufficient food in the soil that has come from the top dressing advised last month.

Two liberal applications of grape dust about a week apart will act as a destroyer of lurking fungous disease germs, apply with a bellows, throwing it well over the plants, choosing the warmest time of the day.

It will be obvious that the advance in temperature should be gradual, also the decline to normal. As a rule the same relation of night and day temperature should be maintained; that is, if you raise one two degrees, carry the other the same number of degrees higher, the exception being during cloudy or stormy weather, when at all times the day temperature is held lower than on bright days. The whole proceeding needs close watching and a man of good judgment at the helm, else more harm than good will be done. GEORGE S. OSBORN.

CHRYSANthemUMS.

Varieties for Commercial Growers.

There is some diversity of opinion as to what really constitutes a good variety for commercial use, but a grower who grows to supply the wholesale market must confine himself to sorts that pack well, stand considerable knocking about and yet retain their freshness. This means that very many of the grandest things are never seen in the florists' stores at all, saving with those florists who have their own greenhouses, and are smart enough to know that if they are growing varieties that the other fellows haven't got they will always get the best trade.

We find that our market (New York) will take any color, almost, if the flower is up to exhibition grade and received in good condition. And I do not much doubt but that most other markets could easily be educated up to that point. The Japanese varieties are not so easily shipped as the close petalled, compact kinds but more care taken in the packing will be well repaid. If about two-thirds of those growers who are at present flooding the market every year with wagon loads of absolute rubbish could only be induced to branch out into some other line of business, things would take on a much more healthy condition. I do not, candidly, think it possible for the average commercial wholesale grower to make any money at the quotations ruling for the last year or two, unless he grows special stock and runs only on the newest varieties.

My selection for the year would run as follows:

White:—Polly Rose, Alice Byron, Robinson, Eaton and Chadwick.

Yellow:—Halliday, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Appleton, Yellow Eaton.

Pink:—Pacific, Lady Harriet, Coombes, Mileham, W. Duckham, A. J. Balfour.

Red and Bronze:—H. J. Jones, Henry Barnes, Kate Broomhead.

This list does not touch one of the new things, with the exception of W. Duckham. This variety is so easily first of the pinks that it is certain of its place at the head of the class. Some others among the novelties will eventually, I think, show up well as commercial kinds. Harrison Dick and Donald McLeod, in particular, but time will prove all things. Mrs. T. W. Pockett, as a yellow, brought in very profitable returns on a small batch. It is a Japanese but seems to travel well. Some growers are complaining that the foliage was easily injured on this variety, so one had better run easy on it for the first year. Buds taken the first week in August will produce grand flowers by October 1. The Eatons and Appleton are now so firmly fixed that it will be years before they are supplanted. Easy to handle, with virtually 100 per cent of good flowers produced, they fill the bill to perfection for the man who hasn't much time to bother.

Dr. Enguehard is being introduced this year as the coming commercial pink. It is by no means a novelty, having been first imported some years ago. I have never grown it, so cannot say much concerning it. It has been advertised as Englehardt, so it would be wise for all dealers to get in line on the proper name.

Two American varieties that have impressed me very favorably are the two seedlings of H. W. Buckbee's introduction. These two seem specially adapted to our commercial needs, and the colors are good. Rockford is a yellow and Mrs. H. W. Buckbee is a white. As exhibited at the New York show they were very promising and certainly good shippers and keepers to have traveled the distance they had.

Robinson, after long years of service, begins to show signs of dissolution. The flowers this year spotted very quickly and the waste was very great. Things are getting down to such a low margin now that one cannot afford to grow varieties that are easily affected by the weather, and the planting of Robinson will be much reduced. Alice Byron, under the same conditions as Robinson, did not lose a petal and, whatever the reason that varieties differ so radically, the fact still remains.

Mrs. Coombes this year produced a white sport and this, if it holds true, should be a first-class variety, for Coombes is a grand pink, and there is room for a good white coming in at that season.

Prices this year were very low, due largely to the fact that there was a small demand for any kind of flowers, and also to the warm bright spell of weather, which brought stock into the market in a heap and swamped everything. The volume of business done in cut flowers this year, in October and November, was away below the average, owing to the Wall street slump, which while it is felt most in New York, affects to a greater or less extent the whole country, for many, even of our own profession have tried before now to get rich quick in the "street" and found they were playing with a marked deck, and the other fellow stacking the cards.

BRIAN BORU.

NEW CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Golden Age is a slightly reflexed, intense yellow, Japanese; better in color than its parent, R. H. Pearson, with foliage equaling that of the well known Georgiana Pitcher. It is of very easy culture and perfects every flower. Height four feet; midseason. Flowers seven inches in diameter. First bud after September 1. An ideal commercial yellow. Certificated by the C. S. A.

Dr. Enguehard (importation, Nonin) is a Japanese incurved, one of the best introductions of recent years. It has been awarded highest honors wherever exhibited. Color, a true pink without the least trace of purple. Stem and foliage perfect. Equally valuable for exhibition or commercial purposes. Perfectly double, with no tendency to coming "sprung-centered." Every flower is perfect. Take bud after August 20; mid-season variety. Size, six and a half inches; height, four feet. The C. S. A. committee awarded Smith & Son 95 points on their exhibit of this importation.

Mrs. Nathan Smith is a Japanese incurved equally suitable for exhibition or commercial purposes. It is a pure, glistening white of very chaste appearance. The petals, which have great substance, loosely incurve and intertwine in an effective but entirely informal manner, producing a finished flower that is perfectly symmetrical without the least trace of formality. In growth it may be classed as a dwarf, not exceeding three and a half feet. It has a robust constitution and its stem and foliage leave nothing to be desired. Flowers six and a half inches in diameter can be produced with ordinarily good culture, and with the special attention given to exhibition blooms, can easily be grown much larger. Every flower comes perfect. Best results are obtained by taking the first bud after September 1. It has the certificate of the C. S. A. Winner in class for best seedling at Boston. Winner of Hill & Co.'s special prize for best seedling or importation at New York. Winner as best white at Buffalo.

Miss Helen Frick is described as the queen of Thanksgiving chrysanthemums. Unmeasurably superior in every respect to Maud Dean or any other pink in cultivation. It is exclusively a commercial variety, with every point in its favor. A Perrin seedling, its stem and foliage equal that standard variety but there the resemblance ceases. Its color is extremely difficult to describe. In some lights it is a pure, soft pink, in others it glistens and shines with all the intermediate shades to true lavender. In each of its changes it is seemingly more beautiful than before. It can be classified as a Japanese of perfect contour, without any trace of formality. It is a free grower of dwarf habit, not exceeding three feet in height, the flower fully six and a half inches and very regular in size. Every bud comes perfect. Certificate C. S. A.

Sunburst is a Japanese incurved, a most beautifully formed flower of a striking color. The base of the petals is an intense yellow, gradually shading to pale yellow at the tips. A strong, free and healthy grower, equally valuable as an exhibition or a commercial variety. Height, four feet; midseason. Take the bud the last week in August. Certificate C. S. A.

Uncle John was greatly admired by John Thorpe, the horticulturist of Chicago, for whom it is named. While the striking combination of color it displays will be its distinguished feature, it possesses all the good points essential in a first-class exhibition and commercial chrysanthemum. The flower of great depth and solidity, is deep bronze at its base gradually shading until the top is richest yellow. This coloring is in no way dependent on age, but is equally marked in all stages. Midseason; four feet. Stem and foliage unsurpassed. Will be invaluable for exhibition collections.

THE EUCHARIS.

There are few more charming, chaste and graceful plants than a well flowered specimen of this bulb. To produce such is not nearly so difficult as many growers suppose. Belonging to the amaryllis family, the most frequent cause of failure lies in treating them after the manner of the other members of the family, with the exception that they are subjected to a higher temperature. Being natives of tropical America, they do require a higher temperature than do the others, but they really do much better in what would be called the warm greenhouse than in the tropical house, the only kind of treatment accorded them until a few years ago.

The successful culture of these beautiful bulbous plants is somewhat as follows:

The varieties best suited for commercial work are E. grandiflora (Amazonica), white with prominent corona, delicately shaded with green, flower scapes two feet in length, six to ten umbels:

the eucharis mite, imported bulbs should be steeped in water for twenty-four hours, then dried and cleaned of all dead and decaying matter previous to planting. A compost in which they thrive splendidly is composed of two parts rich loam to one part of equal proportions of leaf mold and well decomposed cow manure, with the addition of about one-tenth of the whole bulk of charcoal of about the size of a hickory nut. This should be well incorporated but must not be finely pulverized.

As they require copious supplies of water the drainage must be ample and perfect, arranged by beginning with large pieces on the bottom of the pot, using smaller pieces above, the top layer to be almost as small as barley. The bulbs must be planted deep in the pot, but it is better not to cover all of the somewhat long neck until they have begun to move, the remainder to be added as the plants increase in size. The material used for this purpose can also contain more manure than that used in potting.

As they form large, fleshy roots and are gross feeders, they must not be cramped in the pots, five bulbs to a 10-inch pot being sufficient to make nice specimens, which will require little or no disturbance for years; in fact the less they are disturbed the more profusely do they bloom. Offsets, which develop in large quantities and which soon overcrowd the parent plants, should be removed when necessary, disturbing the

At this temperature they produce two crops during the year; at a higher temperature they will produce three crops, but the flowers will neither be so large nor of such good substance, while the chances of failure will be multiplied. Frequent mulchings of cow manure are necessary, as the foliage is somewhat rank and requires lots of sustenance. When the flower scapes appear an application of liquid food helps materially in developing the flowers, but this should be discontinued before the opening of the flower.

When the flowers begin to open the plants should be removed to a house with a night temperature not to exceed 55 degrees. This will prolong their flowering period, the petals will acquire a firmer texture and their keeping qualities will be enhanced. Picking out the anthers will also have a tendency in this direction.

After the flowering season is past and the leaves are matured they should remain in this temperature for a month. The supply of water should be slightly reduced but they must not by any means be dried off, as this is a sure way of weakening the bulbs.

By a careful calculation of their growing period the flowering season can be hastened or retarded by a month or six weeks.

They can also be grown with success on benches, but in my experience they do not flower so freely, although the flowers are larger. This method has also its drawbacks. It is not always convenient or profitable to reduce the temperature of a house to accommodate one class of plants to the possible detriment of the rest of the stock in the house.

Its insect enemies are few and easy to combat, the mite (a species of rhizoglyphus), being the most annoying and destructive. Its presence is distinguished by the leaves turning yellow and dropping off. Kerosene emulsion applied to the neck of the plant just where the leaf emerges is a sure remedy, but care must be taken not to allow any of it to get to the roots, else the cure is worse than the disease. Mealy bugs and thrips are also fond of the eucharis but these can be dealt with by the syringe, using either pure water or any of the tobacco preparations in solution. Geshurst's compound soap is also fatal to these pests.

INVISIBLE LIFE IN SOILS.

Hitherto cultivators of the soil have, with few exceptions, given no thought to the invisible life that plays such an important part below the surface of the ground, through whose agency crops and individual plants are enabled to respond to the fertilizers added to a well-tilled soil. Yet this rational conception of the fundamental cause of productiveness will in future have to be taken into account by horticulturists and gardeners in every department who wish to progress with the times, and aim at deriving the greatest possible results from the capital and labor invested in their establishments.

It is not meant that every horticulturist and gardener should become a bacteriologist, but he should make himself sufficiently acquainted with the nature of bacteria, and understand the conditions favorable to their life, and to be able to appreciate and utilize the results achieved by the study of those who have special opportunities of searching out

IT IS LA DETROIT.

The new Breitmeyer rose was christened La Detroit, with appropriate ceremonies, at the Hotel Cadillac, Detroit, last Saturday afternoon, the christening being by Katherine, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Breitmeyer. Many well known Detroit people were present, also a choice gathering of the congenial spirits in the trade.

The rose, a seedling of Bridesmaid and Testout, originated with Charles Hopp, of Grand Rapids, and was nameless until Saturday. When John Breitmeyer's Sons bought the stock they offered a prize of $100 for the one who should suggest the name eventually selected for it. It is stated that 12,000 persons entered the contest, the selection of the name being left to a committee of the Detroit Florists' Club.

The visiting members of the craft were most hospitably entertained and were afforded the opportunity to see the rose growing at the greenhouses at Mt. Clemens. It is to be distributed next April.

THE LAELIAS.

This is a very fine genus, and some of our most useful orchids belong to it, such species as L. autumnalis, L. anceps and L. purpurata, being among the finest subjects for cut flower work. Laelias are nearly allied to the cattleyas, and many of them succeed well with similar conditions of culture and environment, though the Mexican laelias nearly all require more sunlight, and will be found to flower better if grown up in the ridge of the house, where the breeze from the ventilator blows through them. Laelias and cattleyas cross readily, the resulting hybrids being known as Laelio-cattleyas. These are now becoming very numerous, and some of them are magnificent things and command high prices. While cattleyas have only four pollen masses, laelias have eight, and this seems to be the distinguishing mark between the genus. Laelias are difficult subjects to establish when first imported, or at least that has been my experience, but when once got into a growing condition they will flourish satisfactorily for years.

The giant of the whole genus is L. purpurata, which grows over two feet high and produces flowers eight inches across. These are borne on a twelve-inch stem, generally four or five flowers to a stem. This species grows well under the treatment usually accorded cattleyas. It should be grown in a pot and given lots of room, for it is a tremendously strong grower. Fine specimens are yearly imported from Belgium growing in leaf soil, and apparently enjoying it, but for the general cultivator we would say stick to the peat as a potting medium, with an annual top dressing of moss. We hope to refer to the question of growing orchids in leaf mold at some future time, when some experiments are concluded. At present some growers are getting good results from its use, and others are getting no results at all. The whole matter seems to hinge on the personal ability to be careful in watering.

To return to our immediate subject, L. purpurata, we would say that its only objection in our eyes lies in the fact that it flowers in May and June, when orchid flowers are, alas, already too plentiful in the markets (due principally to the immense quantity of Cattleya Mossiae coming in at that time). Still L. purpurata holds its own in any company, its rich purple crimson lip being very striking among a mass of cattleya flowers. It is a native of Brazil.

Next in importance for general use possibly is L. autumnalis. This is a Mexican laelia and needs an abundance of water when growing with a long severe season of rest after flowering. Grow it in a basket, or on a block of wood, and keep in a light, airy position. As its name implies, L. autumnalis flowers in the fall and can be had just right for the holidays. The flowers are very fragrant, almost too much so, in fact, as the odor from a large bunch is almost overpowering. L. autumnalis is a useful, profitable orchid to grow, and the flowers command a ready sale.

L. anceps, which is another Mexican species of great value, has many handsome white forms in its varieties, as alba, Dawsoni, Stella, etc. The typical flowers of L. anceps are rosy lilac, with a deep purple lip, and are produced in January. This plant, in its native home, it is said, gets drenched by rain every night during its growing season, and it is recommended to spray in the evening under cultivation, to imitate somewhat the natural conditions.

Laelia alba is another Mexican species and general cultural notes apply.

This species has a fine, long stem which carries six to eight flowers. The petals and sepals are white and the lip rose colored. The flowers have a very distinctive odor, which has been compared to that given out by the leaves of the primula when crushed in the hand. L. alba should be grown cool.

Laelia Jongheana is a very distinct species from Brazil. It was for a long while very rare, but recent large importations have made it comparatively well known. The bulbs are small and stout, and the flowers are, for a laelia, very large. The flowers are flat, with very handsome sepals and petals being of a rose purple color and the lip bordered with a deeper purple. They are produced in March, generally from two to five flowers on a stem and last a long time if kept dry. We recently saw a batch growing in leaf soil that were in splendid condition. These plants were on a shelf close to the glass and were never watered, the top dressing of moss being kept slightly moistened. Some growers have tried the same method and been forced to repot their plants in peat or lose them altogether.

Laelia flava also comes from Brazil and has small, tapering bulbs of a reddish color. The flower spike, which is carried well erect, bears generally from eight to ten flowers, which are small but of a bright canary yellow. While the flowers are very small the species has proved useful in the hands of the hybridist, some excellent crosses having been made with cattleyas. It is best grown in a basket hung from the roof.

L. cinnabarina requires similar treatment to L. flava. It has also been useful to the hybridist, the striking orange scarlet color of its flowers being prominent in its progeny. L. cinnabarina comes from Brazil, as does also L. harpophylla, which is generally considered as far superior to L. cinnabarina.

Other species are L. magalis, which produces very large flowers and needs to be kept dry and very cool during the winter, a very fine species; L. Dayana, a very dwarf midwinter flowering species, and L. Digbyana, better known probably as Brassavola Digbyana. This latter species produces single flowers very striking in appearance, of a creamy white color with a lip very deeply fringed. This species has also been used considerably in crossing.

There are other species but the foregoing are probably most generally known and cultivated. Speaking generally, laelias are not so useful to the florist as cattleyas, because the flowers individually are smaller, and consequently not so showy, but many species have such long, graceful stems that they can be used to excellent advantage in vases where cattleyas would be too short. We may safely predict that the demand for these orchids will increase as time goes on. Scale is a troublesome pest on some species, but ordinary care and sponging once in a while will keep it down.

PENTSTEMONS.

Those who have not cultivated or seen the newer forms of pentstemons cannot have any idea of the great improvement that has been made during the last few years. Instead of the small, tube-like blossoms which characterize many older varieties, we now have varieties with blossoms fully two inches in diameter, and finely formed spikes of flowers quite twelve inches in length. The colors, moreover, are so decisive, bright scarlet, with a pure white throat; in other cases purple accompanies the lighter coloring. White flushed or edged with pink is a distinct and attractive combination of colors. I am surprised that people grow the small-flowered varieties, now the larger flowered forms are so readily obtainable. There is a certain amount of pleasure in cultivating a batch of seedlings, but with the finality of present-day varieties so much more satisfaction is derived from those which have been selected and named.

Pentstemons are easily grown, an open position, deeply dug and well-manured soil being all that is required during the summer to ensure finely-developed flower spikes. If the weather is fairly moist both growth and flower production will be encouraged. Pentstemons do not, in fact, suffer from a continuance of showery weather when in bloom, which is a point in their favor, more especially in districts with a heavy rainfall. Strong plants bedded out will quickly become established and come into bloom, but the best results are obtained by planting in April. When planted out pinch out the point of growth, to ensure a bushy plant capable of producing from four to six stout flowering stems.

The following is a brief selection of varieties that cannot fail to give satisfaction if reasonable culture is given:

Rachel, white, flushed pink; Lord Lister, bright scarlet, pure white throat; Mrs. Forbes, rich crimson, throat veined crimson, extra large flowers; N. Barnes, dark crimson, flowers large, with open white throat; Thomas Cook, rosy crimson, veined and maculated chocolate; George Howe, enormous flowers, bright scarlet, with a pure white throat; General White, rich rose, pure white throat; Hector Macdonald, an extra fine spike of large, rich rose blossoms, each having a clearly veined chocolate throat; Magnificence, rosy crimson, white throat; Talma, light rose, edged dark rose; Verdi, purplish-crimson, white throat; Titian, white, shaded lilac; Mrs. Norman, rose-pink, white throat; Triumphant, clear rose, spotted with carmine on the under lobes; and Miss Dawson, rich rose, white throat.—S. P., in Gardeners' Magazine.

PLANT DISEASES.

The following are the general remarks on plant diseases with which Prof. George Violets in Basket, with Blue Ribbon.

E. Stone, of Hatch Experiment Station, prefaced his address on diseases of the chrysanthemum at the recent New York meeting of the C. S. A.:

The diseases to which plants are subject under glass require different methods of prevention than those employed outdoors, since in greenhouses the crop conditions are largely under control, whereas in outdoor crops they are left to the mercy of the weather and whims of the season. To meet the unforeseen seasonal conditions to which outdoor crops are subject it is necessary to resort to methods of prevention each year. Such methods consist in spraying crops, or applying other methods of treatment, before certain pests have made their appearance. There is, however, very little need of the application of spraying mixtures to greenhouse plants, since the conditions which give rise to diseases can be, and are, controlled to a very large extent by expert gardeners. The recommendations, therefore, for a general system of spraying for indoor crops, such as is expedient at the present time for outdoor crops, would be irrational, and would constitute a step in the wrong direction. Every expert grower realizes this, and the more skilled the gardener is, the fewer diseases he has to contend with.

The gardener who can turn out a nearly perfect crop as regularly as a manufacturing establishment turns out its products, is qualified for the severest tests of proficiency. The increased production of high priced greenhouse products has been the means of training and developing a large class of men as efficient growers, and with this increased skill and knowledge there has come about a better understanding of the causes of diseases and the methods of controlling them. Were greenhouse men on the same level, as regards knowledge of plant production, with the rather backward and conservative outdoor growers, the number of diseases which they would have to contend with would far exceed those which confront them at present. In this respect there exists a great gulf between the ordinary farmer and the intelligent floriculturist. It is, indeed, only where absolute care and management of plants falls under the supervision of gardeners, that we are likely to see manifested an intimate knowledge of the plants' normal functions and limitations. We have often been amazed at the superior skill and knowledge displayed by gardeners, and would affirm, without hesitation, that some of them possess a most profound knowledge of facts pertaining to practical plant physiology.

The greater part of our knowledge concerning the control of greenhouse diseases has been derived from the intelligence and skill of the progressive gardeners, whereas, in a case of outdoor crops, the experiment station specialists have been foremost in offering suggestions and discovering remedies for their control. The trained agriculturist can consistently give information in regard to the control of specific diseases affecting outdoor crops, in which he is more or less familiar, but in cases of greenhouse crops, the methods of treatment are so different, and require such an insight into the crop requirements, that it is almost necessary that one should be an expert grower, or, at any rate, one must understand something about the normal requirements of the crop before his judgment and advice can be of much value. It is necessary, at least, that he should possess a thorough understanding of the influence on plant growth of the three cardinal factors, heat, light and moisture, and the role which they play in the production of normal crops, together with their relationship to the development of pathogenic or disease producing organisms.

Such matters as soil texture and soil fertility also constitute important factors which must necessarily be understood. The great attention that must be given to such matters as heat, moisture, light and the circulation of air in greenhouse culture is only appreciated by the trained gardener. Some of the most troublesome and disastrous diseases are entirely controlled by the intelligent utilization of these factors, and others, which are more or less common, could no doubt be controlled or greatly alleviated if modifications in the methods of growing certain crops were practicable.

The beneficial results which have come from spraying outdoor crops have unfortunately, been the means of inducing some to believe that this is the only method of treating plant diseases, and where spraying is not recommended as a remedy their enthusiasm diminishes, because they cannot conceive of any other method of treatment. We have grown for some years many experimental crops in the greenhouse, and we have seldom had occasion to see the need of applying spraying mixtures to greenhouse crops. In the elimination of disease from greenhouse crops, the ultimate aim should be to select varieties of plants which will prove immune from, as well as to study and devise conditions which will not favor the development of diseases. The most perfect and hardiest plant organism can become diseased in a remarkably short time if the conditions that are suitable for its normal requirements are changed.

We all have observed, no doubt, how the master craftsman will select his stock and create something worthy of attention, where another less skilled, will start with the same material and his product will be a lot of poor, sickly specimens, adapted only to the confines of the clinic or the show case of some pathological museum. The latter has felt obliged to doctor his plants with the standard mixtures, but would it not have been better if his time had been spent in obtaining a little more practical knowledge pertaining to the growing of healthy plants, and devoting less attention to securing the knowledge of decoctions?

The appearance of some of our most troublesome diseases affecting plants at the present time must, therefore, be attributed in part to lack of knowledge and lack of skill in handling the crop. Diseases may also be encouraged by extensive modifications of the natural habits of growth through breeding and cultivation and to the practice of increased forcing. New parasitic organisms have also been introduced from time to time from other countries, through traffic. Some of these fungi, however, which have recently proven disastrous, have been with us for some years, if not always, and one of the principal reasons of their becoming more troublesome at the present time can be attributed to the increased production of more succulent, tender plants, brought about by forcing, which enables these parasites to find more favorable conditions in which to thrive.

With every modification and innovation in the growing of plants, there are likely to occur new difficulties and obstacles to be overcome. Constitutional weaknesses, which develop in some varieties and are inherited in others, are unfavorable to immunity. Varieties of carnations inclined to succulency, or having two or three per cent more water contents in their leaves, have proven much more susceptible to rust than those containing less water.

There is little doubt but that many diseases could be prevented by modifications in the methods of growing plants, if such could be adopted. The so-called "drop" in lettuce would prove less disastrous if the plants could be elevated from the soil sufficiently to allow air and light to penetrate to the stem. This would result in producing firmer and more resistant tissues. Experiments have shown that a covering of coarse sand about lettuce plants materially reduced rot, simply from the fact that sand retains moisture much less readily than loam, thus offering less favorable opportunities for fungous infection, and no doubt a circulation of air about the stems would prove beneficial. In the same manner, sub-irrigation reduces stem-rot by maintaining a smaller amount of moisture in the top layers of soil. The shutting out of light and air by planting too thickly constitutes a source of danger to disease. Water cress and parsley offer good examples of the effects of over crowding, due to luxuriant growth. When these crops are allowed to grow high and become thick they produce weak stems, and develop stem-rot, whereas being closely cropped there is little loss from this disease. The exclusion of light and air necessarily arising from an overcrowded condition are responsible for this.

In most instances the stem-rot of the chrysanthemum has been induced by over-crowding and undoubtedly the carnation would suffer less if more light and air could reach the stems. Various stem rots could undoubtedly be eliminated, to a large extent, by changing the soil conditions about the plants, such as by the application of coarse sand around the stems. In one case the stem-rot in the parsley was eliminated by setting the plants well up above the soil, thus exposing the stem and crown to light and air, which resulted in the development of more resistant tissues.

The matter of moisture on the foliage plays an important part in infection. The carnation rust has been largely reduced by subirrigation methods and also by applying water absorbents, such as lime, to the foliage. In snort, many fungous diseases, peculiar to foliage, can be much lessened and in many instances prevented by regulating the moisture conditions of the air. The cucumber and melon blights, which have raised havoc with these crops, the last few years in New England, have never troubled our greenhouse crops, grown under minimum moisture conditions, notwithstanding the fact that infected crops were abundant outdoors in the immediate vicinity. If it were possible to control the moisture conditions outdoors the same would hold true there. For example, a cold, wet spring induces peach leaf curl, while a dry, warm spring is not favorable for the development of the fungus which ond photograph was taken from the same position December 2 and clearly shows the higher supports, improved growth and increased quantity of buds.

ERIE, PA.

Baur Place Closed.

On Monday, December 7, Sheriff Burton levied on the stock and other effects of S. Alfred Baur, in the store at 110 State street, and on the stock and all personal property at the extensive new greenhouses on West Twenty-sixth street. The sale at the store is advertised for December 11, at 9 o'clock in the morning, and at the greenhouses at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the same date. The and sliced cold pork, and when he did return to town the report was that business had been very good. Chrysanthemums to make the house cheerful and violets to send to "the only one" were rather the favorite flowers. 'Mums are about all over and roses and carnations have now come in for a long season; of good qualities of both there are none too many. Growers are pleased with the prices that the commission house and retailers are giving them for good carnations and we hear of this from several parts of the country. This is as it should be. Carnations have for years been grown at little or no profit. If the grandmother and your wife and children all worked at it, and you managed to keep out of debt, or perhaps you grew other things that did yield a profit but without keeping any account, you thought the carnations were earning you a living. The long-stemmed fine carnation that is wanted today should bring close upon the same price as a Bride, Bridesmaid, Perle, Morgan or any of the popular tea roses. Why not? I heard an eastern rose grower, who does not by any means brag of his skill, say that his Bridesmaids averaged twenty-six buds during the year, and a western grower said at the same meeting that his roses of the same varieties averaged forty-nine buds. Can anyone of you do much better with the fine varieties of carnations than twenty-six flowers? Then there is only the little difference in cost of fuel, and its not enough to count, and labor is about the same. A dozen Prosperity, Enchantress or Harlowarden should be worth just as much, wholesale or retail, as a dozen Bridesmaid or Meteor roses, relative quality being the same.

Buffalo seems well off for flowering plants for the holiday season. Palmer, Rebstock and Anderson are all making lavish displays of Begonia Lorraine, all home grown. Mr. Rebstock has enough for the eighth judicial district, which includes the eight western counties of the state. Anderson has a splendid lot of poinsettias and cyclamens. Palmer has begonias, cyclamens, azaleas, etc., to burn, or rather I should say to freeze, and at Cold Springs will be found plenty of flowering plants to satisfy all who will venture so far into the suburbs.

There have been some large demands causes curl, and many other cases might be cited where infection is due to weather conditions which cannot be controlled; whereas, in under-glass culture there would be little difficulty in controlling these conditions, and preventing such diseases. The application of moisture absorbents to asparagus plants has, in some instances, very perceptibly reduced the rust, and even the covering of an apple tree is often sufficient to keep the dew off and render the plants free from infection. With this idea in mind, tent cloth crops have been tried with some degree of encouragement, although the expense of tent covers and the results obtained from their use do not at present appear to be such as to warrant their employment in all instances.

Another element which has a great bearing on the health of plants in general is proper feeding. The influence which proper feeding and cultivation has on the susceptibility of crops to disease is quite marked. There is little doubt that in many cases time and money could be better spent in securing robust crops by cultivating and feeding, than in spraying sickly plants.

NEW CARNATIONS.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs in a house of F. Dornier & Sons Co.'s new white carnations, Lady Bountiful on the first and The Belle on the farther bench. The house was planted July 28, 1903. The first photograph was taken September 14 and shows the earliness of the varieties. The sec-seizures were made to satisfy claims of Rev. Christian Adolf Baur.

for funeral flowers of late. The death of a very popular dock contractor brought out all the designs you can think of, and the grand recorder of the Knights of Macabees, who died in Port Huron, and was buried here, called for many rich emblems, of which Brother Wm. Legg took care of most.

The last time I passed the corner of High and Main streets Louis H. Neubeck was just sweeping out his very ornamental new office; by this time he must be fully installed, and a most attractive place he has. The street ends of his houses were then gay with the plants of the season.

We are, indeed, sorry to have missed Peter Crowe, who stopped off on a flying visit to Erie, Pa., but we are going to see that portly gentleman and all the rest of the Utica friends next week.

Mr. Fancourt, who talks for S. S. Pennock and Mr. Bunyard, who solicits for Clucas & Boddington, called at the same moment. Delightful young men both, and Harry brings you the latest witticisms which are so much appreciated in the provincial towns.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There are more flowers coming into town now; the bright sunshine has toned them up so that both quality and quantity are all that could be desired. There is plenty of business, enough to absorb all the flowers quietly without fuss or hurry. Prices are unchanged, with the exception of lower grade roses, which have declined. Choice roses of all kinds are eagerly sought, especially the varieties outside the "big four," they are wanted to give variety at the teas, now myriad strong.

Choice carnations have brought good prices. In the ordinary grades red and white have sold better than pink but in the fancies Enchantress has moved up into Class A, Section 1, beside Prosperity.

Calla lilies are all becoming quite plentiful and can be had in quantity, also Euphorbia poinsettiana. Sweet peas are rounding into form. Edward Reid has some superb stock that sells readily. Orchids are scarce. Chrysanthemums can still be had of fair quality and will, we are assured, be with us until New Year's.

"Bloomers."

This, gentle reader, does not refer to the much discussed garment, but to that earnestly desired addition to the Christmas stock, a plant in bloom. It seems unlikely that we shall have as large a stock of Lorraine begonias in this market as usual. There will, however, be some good plants, and rather more fine cyclamens than ever before. Robert Craig & Son have three houses filled with these plants. They have also a large stock of small azaleas just coming into flower, and what is quite a novelty at this season, a batch of spiræas quite well covered with flower spikes. These were carried over in cold storage and were forced quite as successfully as at Easter. There are some poinsettias about, though most of these are grown for cutting, and also the primroses and berried plants described last week, which will make up a good assortment for the retailers.

Bu'bs.

It is learned on good authority that the seed houses in this city have never experienced such a demand for bulbs as during the season just closed. The Henry A. Dreer Co., Johnson & Stokes and Henry F. Michell Co. have all imported and sold far more bulbs than last season. In many cases large quantities were bought here after all the importations had arrived. The increased demand was noticed especially in named tulips for outdoor planting, and to a lesser extent in mixed tulips and in named hyacinths. Among the forcing bulbs Romans and Paper Whites and again named tulips were especially popular. Spiræas are also selling well.

A Christmas Wedding.

The REVIEW always aims to give the events of the day, rather than of the past; when, owing to the paper being a weekly, it becomes necessary to choose between today and tomorrow the choice is easy. Know then, kind reader, that while you are glancing over these words a novel Christmas wedding is taking place. The bridal party stands before a background of Christmas trees. The bride carries a bunch of mistletoe, and probably takes the consequences blushing, while the bridesmaid's bouquets are made of holly, with its bright red berries. This arrangement was designed and executed by Hugh Graham.

Notes.

William K. Harris has a house of gardenias which has passed through many fall dangers and safely entered the home stretch leading to the coveted goal, mid-winter flowers.

Robert Craig & Son have fitted up handsome new offices on their place at Forty-ninth and Market streets.

Edward Reid secured a new customer while west this summer, to whom he shipped a wedding order November 23. The flowers reached their destination at Valley City, N. D., and elicited a warm letter of commendation.

The experts are giving kind words to John A. Shellem's new rose.

An out-of-town amateur stated, when here recently, that he was experimenting with leucothoe and galax as house plants with encouraging results so far.

James Heacock, of Wyncote, was elected a member of the Florists' Club at the December meeting.

John Burton has a very large stock of Cypripedium insigne in bud and bloom.

James Cole had a well grown lot of chrysanthemums in pots the past season. This stock went poorly at first, but sold well toward the close of last month.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., has returned from a successful trip. PHIL.

FLOWER SEED NOVELTIES.

Frederick Roemer, Quedlinburg, Germany, is offering a new Begonia semperflorens, Golden King, the flower a rich crimson and foliage golden yellow. Also a new yellow fringed primula; the leaves are a deep purplish green, the flowers quite large and make a nice contrast with the dark foliage. Cineraria Scarlet Queen is said to have flowers a brighter red than any heretofore introduced. Pansy Rosy Morn and Volcano are of the giant flowering class. His list of new annual asters comprises some really charming sorts.

THE Michigan authorities state that the acreage of clover seed harvested in Michigan compared with an average is sixty-one per cent. The average yield per acre this season is 1.16 bushels. Owing to unfavorable weather much of the clover failed to fill and consequently was cut for hay.

OMAHA, NEB.—Forest Lawn Cemetery has a part of its new greenhouse range ready for use. The rest will be finished in the spring.

You may omit our adv.; we sold all our plants in a very short time; your paper is O. K.—C. B. FLICK, Fort Wayne, Ind.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The business the past week was very irregular, but as a whole trade can be classed as good. Thanksgiving prices prevailed all through the week and a better feeling was observed by all in the trade. Good fancy stock has shortened up considerably, with second and third grade stock not over-plentiful. We are enjoying most beautiful weather at the present time and plant decorations can be made without the wagon heaters. The retailers say, "that colder weather is needed to keep the fakirs off the streets." Some of the down-town stores are assuming Christmas appearance, being decorated with wreathing and holly and from reports of some of our florists they have big orders ahead in that line. The prospects are good for a heavy demand for ground pine, holly and mistletoe.

The demand for choice roses is big and not enough come in to supply the demand. The quality of Meteor, Carnot, Bride and Maid is fine. Beauties are in good supply and more plentiful. The demand is best on medium-stemmed flowers. Prices remain the same. In violets the market is only half supplied and those that come in are very fine and bring $1 per 100. The only variety is California. Chrysanthemums are all cut out; the last came in on Saturday, small Eatons and Golden Weddings.

The bulb stock is somewhat scarce and only a few hundred Romans and Paper Whites are in daily, which sell quickly. Valley is in good demand and of extra fine quality. There are calls for callas and Harrisii, but none are in the market. The bulk of the carnations that come in are fine, but not over plentiful and the carnation growers realize clean sales these days. White has the biggest demand. Fine Queen Louise were in the past week, also fancy Morning Glory, Lawson, Nelson and Estelle; $4 to $5 per 100 is asked for these. A few fine Enchantress and Prosperity bring as high as $6. Good common varieties bring $3 per 100.

Wild smilax is having a big run with the West End florists. Greenhouse smilax is fine, with plenty of it in the market. Same can be said of other greens, except asparagus, which seems scarce in this market.

Various Notes.

L. Baumann, of L. Baumann & Co., Chicago, was in town last week selling florists' supplies. Mr. Baumann reports business in his line rushing.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill., and A. S. Halstedt, of Belleville, were callers the past week, buying supplies for their home trade.

Chas. L. Cannon has opened the store recently vacated by the Lupe Sisters, in the Columbia candy store. Charlie is now a neighbor to his friend, Fred Foster.

C. A. Kuehn is having a big run on wire work, and the cut flower and supply departments are busy filling orders.

Theo. Miller, accompanied by John Steidel, visited the Clayton florists the past week and reports everything looking lovely for Christmas supply.

Henry Berning is handling a fine lot of violets and carnations grown by F. Ude, Jr., of Kirkwood.

A. Jablonsky, at Wellston, has a fine lot of Gloire de Lorraine begonias which will come in handy for Christmas sales. Mr. Jablonsky is past master in the art of growing these.

Fred Breunig, A. Felter and F. W. Mass, of the St. Louis Seed Co., have made application for membership to the Florists' Club. These applications will be presented at the meeting of the club this week, Thursday.

Frank M. Ellis reports some large shipping orders for Thanksgiving. Mr. Ellis is receiving a lot of fancy stock these busy days.

The poultry show the past week was visited by a number of the florists. Messrs. Kuehn, Koenig and Pilcher were rivals for prizes, each receiving a number of premiums of the first and second classes. The florists who visited the show, besides the exhibitors, were J. F. Ammann, A. G. Fehr, R. J. Mohr, F. M. Ellis and your correspondent.

Bowling.

In the four games bowled by the Florists' Club on Monday night, the scores of the first three men were of a high order. The record for the games is as follows:

CHICAGO.

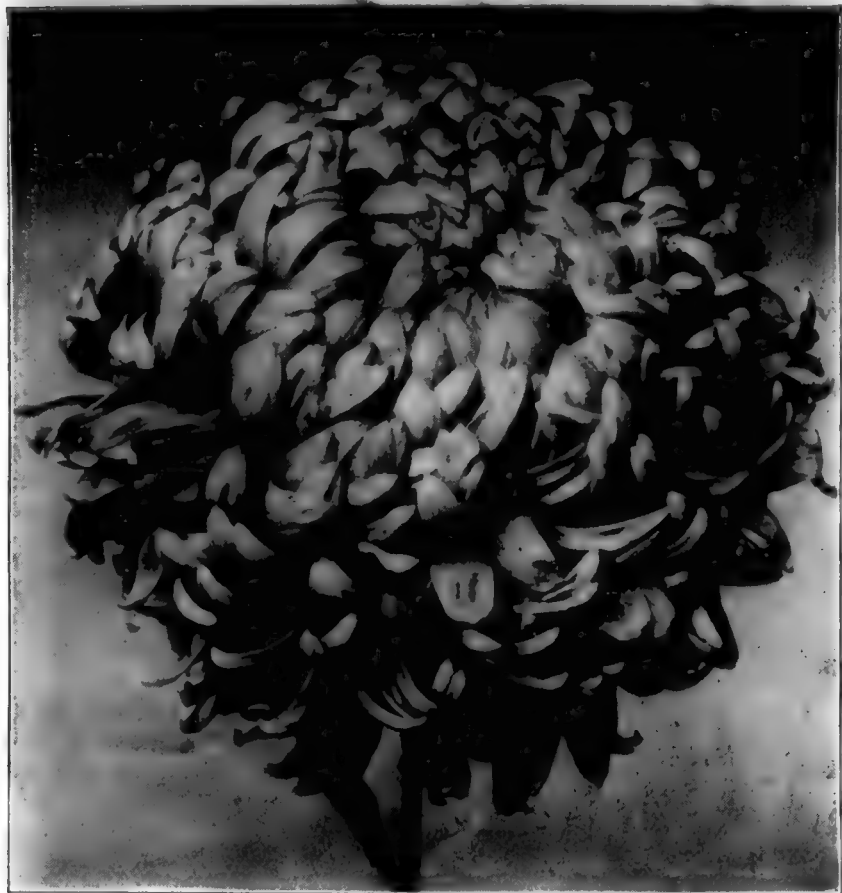

The Market.

Toward the close of last week the market began to stiffen, on light receipts and under the stimulus of increasing demand. This week there is comparatively little stock in the market and the tone is good, with excellent prospects ahead.

Beauties continue among the most plentiful of items and quality is still excellent with most growers, but prices are under those of last year at this date. There are comparatively light receipts of Brides and Maids and some crops are of low average quality. Good stock is selling well, some specials having been taken by local buyers at as high as 12 cents, but this is by no means a market price, far more flowers having been sold at 1 cent than at the first named rate. Other roses are also in only moderate supply.

Carnations have held stiff all week. There is a greater scarcity in this department than the market has seen in a long time, and yet some flowers have gone to waste this week, such poor stock that the buyers could not use it at any price. However, most of the receipts are of very good quality. Violets are another item which have been short this week, but it is suspected that there are plenty on the plants. There is still some call for chrysanthemums, but few at hand, and not many of them of good quality. The low grade stock is poor property.

Valley is good, also plentiful, and Romans and Paper Whites are also equal to demand. Sprengeri is selling well and so are bunches of plumosus tips. Smilax is selling steadily and the shortage of bouquet green is serving to stimulate the demand for asparagus strings.

Christmas Prospects.

There is considerable variation in views as to the outlook for Christmas supplies, but a summing up would be about as follows: There is likely to be a good Beauty crop, with enough long-stemmed and the usual shortage in the medium grades. Good tea roses will be scarce, with plenty of "our selection," for this is not what the best buyers want for Christmas. Red is sure to be short. Carnations are already under the demand and good colored stock is sure to be short for the holiday. Undoubtedly more or less aged blooms will develop to break down growers' averages, but he who holds back white at all on such a market as the present deserves no sympathy and as the market is now $3 to $5 on first class stuff no wise man will store colored stock more than a day. Violets are likely to be fairly plentiful. There will be the usual supplies in miscellaneous lines.

Various Notes.

The third trade exhibition of the Chicago Florists' Club will be held in room 522 in the Atlas block on Wednesday, December 16, from 3 to 7:30 p. m. The exhibits are to be holiday plants, novelties and new carnations. F. F. Benthey is manager and the judges are to be C. A. Samuelson, J. F. Kidwell and George Stollery. Gratuities are offered by Peter Reinberg and Wietor Bros. The regular meeting of the club will follow at 8 p. m., when papers will be read by W. J. Smyth and J. S. Wilson on "Desirable Holiday Plants Not Found in this Market." Every member of the trade should turn out for this meeting.

C. W. McKellar has recently visited a number of western and southern cities. He found the trade prospering everywhere but says Chicago is good enough for him, without doubt the center of the floricultural industry.

At Wietor Bros.' the rose houses never looked better and the carnations are fine. They have some White Bonnafon mums which will be in just right for Christmas.

E. H. Hunt is turning out some splendid birch bark ware novelties in the line of pedestals and zinc lined vases.

J. W. Canaga has started a flower store at Fifty-fifth and Indiana avenue. It is a good location, with no competition anywhere near.

E. E. Pieser says he is looking for a new record for Christmas trade if the growers will land their stock in the market when it is wanted, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Last Friday Bassett & Washburn received 100,000 English Manetti stocks for rose grafting. They are grafting practically all the stock for their own use and also going more extensively than ever into the cutting and plant business.

Paul Blome has opened a retail store on North Clark street, near the George Wittbold Co., with whom he was employed for several years.

Louis Mohn, brother of Mrs. Will Kyle, of Kennicott's, was fatally injured in the Nevada railroad wreck mentioned last week. The body was brought here for burial at Mt. Greenwood.

John Poehlmann is pessimistic as to Christmas; he says that roses are off crop and Beauties shortening up, so that he does not look for large supplies.

Bassett & Washburn have been close to the anxious seat on the coal question, receiving only three cars in ten days. Mr. Washburn made a trip to the mines at Streator last week.

The steadily increasing cost of boxes is making P. & D. quite a question with those houses which make no charge for it. The box makers are in a close combination and have been steadily tightening the screws for a long time.

Weber Bros. have a splendid cut of Brides and Maids coming on, just right for Christmas. Theirs are all old plants and the quality is excellent. Amling is their selling agent.

Peter Reinberg thinks Chatenay is the only rose, unless it is Sunrise; certainly these two are giving him good results this year.

Poinsettias are likely to be a none too plentiful article this Christmas. Winterson has his usual source of supply, but many growers have dropped them and others are late.

M. Winandy is reported to be about to put up nine more short-roofed greenhouses, filling in his corner.

The Foley Mfg. Co. has a new sash lifting machine of very simple construction which several good growers have tried and of which they speak highly. They will push it this season.

Visitors: F. H. Holton, Milwaukee; R. Peterson, Cincinnati; Wm. Dittman, New Castle, Ind.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Prices have been fairly well maintained since the level reached just after the scarcity and increased demand for Thanksgiving had subsided. Beauties of the highest grade held at 35 cents, best Brides and Maids at 12 cents. The inferior grades have fallen off materially from last week's prices. Carnations also failed to maintain the high rates of last week, and violets were again in excess of requirements; thousands were sold as low as 50 cents, while the special selected stock seldom went above $1.50. Better quality of stock will, however, scarcely be seen this season. Chrysanthemums are nearing the end and very few will hold until the holidays.

With the Retailers.

The retail stores begin to put on gay attire and demonstrate already the near approach of the festive holiday season. Poinsettias, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and azaleas especially make the windows attractive. Holly, wild smilax and Christmas greens form an effective background for the decorations. One of the large Broadway stores had a great display of selected fruit in fancy baskets dressed with asparagus, as a center to a window decoration, the sides of the window draped with immense curtains of purple velvet and satin caught up with tassels and gold cords and ribbons.

Alex. McConnell has had quite a run of weddings lately, the Preyn-Metcalf affair at the Church of the Incarnation being the most notable. Mr. McConnell has made every arrangement for the accommodation of out-of-town florists whose customers send boxes of flowers to their New York friends at Christmas.

Hanft Bros. are sending two men to Troy for a big reception decoration this week. At a dinner of the New York Yacht Club at Delmonico's last week, the center piece was a model of the snip Revolution, three and one-half feet long, the hull of white carnations, deck of Liberty roses and fittings of American Beauties, a handsome conception completed by their froce within an hour. Last Saturday they had the shell dinner of the Peanut Club, of which Mr. Hanft is a member. Smilax and sea-grass, with Beauties, formed the decorations.

M. A. Bowe is delighted with the improvement in business, his handsome store in the heart of the city feeling the first effects of renewed prosperity. The windows here are always attractive, the best of everything being used in their decoration.

Various Items.

Bradshaw & Hartman will occupy their branch at 48 West Twenty-eighth street until the end of the year. It is gay with plants, Christmas greens and bells. Mr. Hartman has been ill this week.

H. H. Berger & Co. report the best fall business in recent years. They have just received a large importation of cocos and kentia seeds.

John Scott, of Brooklyn, will place his new nephrolepis, Scottli, on the market June 1. The leading seed and bulb houses are cataloguing it and it is very popular locally, and wherever it has been exhibited. Mr. Scott has some beautiful specimens of Piersoni in 8-inch pans, and his Anna Foster and Bostons well entitle him to the designation, "fern specialist."

Herman Dreyer is a good example of the old adage that "everything comes to him who waits." The Pennsylvania railroad is reported to have just counted out $126,000 for his property at Woodside. There is a thoroughfare known as "Easy Street" close by the greenhouses and Mr. Dreyer is located on the sunny side.

Wm. Ghormley is receiving some fine mums and expects the supply to hold out until after Christmas. He receives a good cut of Beauties and has violets "to beat the band," as he expresses it. Last year he handled 300,000 for Christmas and expects it will be half a million this time.

David Cook, a well-known landscape gardener and florist, is dead at his home in Fishkill Landing, aged 72 years.

Frank and August Millang and Bonnot Bros. maintain life in the Cut Flower Exchange long after "the battling crowd" departs; in fact, from 6 in the morning until the evening shadows fall, they may always be found at their headquarters and the amount of business they are doing would make any of the wholesalers a Merry Christmas.

The sympathy of his many friends is extended to Charles Weathered and family on account of the death of Thomas W. Weathered, whose name has been associated with the greenhouse heating and building business for many years. Mr. Weathered died on Friday morning, December 4. He was in his 85th year. The funeral was held on Sunday, many florists attending.

Judicious advertising, enterprise and square dealing always pay; James McManus is an excellent demonstration of the fact. His business has increased 100 per cent during the past year. The progress of the orchid department is especially encouraging. Some of the largest growers are on his list, and his shipments go daily to many of the large cities.

The belated consignment of roses, rhododendrons, etc., has arrived at Elliott's and this week Friday completes the season of auction sales. Holly trees also will be offered and some very nice stock will be offered for Christmas.

Stumpp & Walter are very optimistic as to the Christmas trade in every line and report a season's business to date, more than double that of last year. Their output of holly will reach nearly 1,000 cases. English mistletoe is a specialty here and their big stores on Barclay and Thirty-fourth streets are gay with Christmas bells and evergreens of every kind.

Alex Guttman's specialty in plants for Christmas will be cyclamen in 6-inch pots, as usual. He disposes of a large quantity of this popular plant every year. His facilities for an extensive wholesale cut flower business have increased greatly since Christmas, 1902.

Charles Millang has installed his new telephone, with switch connections with his office, conservatory and wholesale cut flower department.

J. K. Allen is celebrating these days, for he is "sweet sixteen." Every morning since 1887 on deck at 5 o'clock is a pretty good market record.

Reed & Keller are completely sold out of their folding bells, their sales of this specialty aggregating 30,000 exclusive of those sold by their agencies in St. Louis and Chicago. Every bell was sold to the trade, the department stores being religiously avoided. This firm report a great business on every line this year, their inventions alone forming a large percentage of their output.

On Saturday evening, December 5, Fred Smith, of Woodside, the "good twin," was married to Miss Eberhardt, of the same place.

Moore, Hentz & Nash are again receiving fine stock of the Queen of Edgely rose, for which they are sole agents in New York city.

James A. Hammond makes a specialty for Christmas of the orange tree, as usual. Handling over 1,000 fine plants each season, from 5-inch pots at $1 each, up to some specimens that easily command $10 to $15 in the bon ton retail stores.

Slinn & Hughes are handling all of Jerome Suydam's carnations, and are the New York agents for his red, Amaze, which was so much admired at the Brooklyn convention. Their business has grown rapidly since the formation of the partnership in the early fall.

L. J. Kreshover is, like all the supply men, overwhelmed with business. His space will have to be greatly enlarged to accommodate the increase. He finds the demand for immortelles unprecedented.

Bouquet green is short and many orders will remain unfilled. Five carloads of holly and wild smilax in great quantities are amongst the preparations for the inevitable demand.

N. Lecakes has purchased the famous fourteen-acre lily pond at Norwalk, Conn., known all over that state and ensuring him an immense supply of the popular flower in its season. This company, with its branch store and stands in the markets, is doing a great business in green goods, not only now, but throughout the year.

Hicks & Crawbuck report their florist supply department a greater success than they anticipated and the convenience for the Brooklyn florists is thoroughly appreciated. This firm will handle about everything in the supply line for Christmas.

Ralph M. Ward returned from Europe Friday, December 4.

The contemplated flower show and sale of plants at the Herald Square Exhibition Hall, where the chrysanthemum show was held, will take place the week before Easter and not the week before Christmas, as stated last week.

PITTSBURG CLUB MEETING.

The Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club held its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday evening, December 1. The subject before the club was Christmas plants, flowers and materials. Antoine Schultheis, College Point, N. Y., exhibited a nice lot of young palms, solanums in berry and cape heaths. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. had a large assortment of wreaths, bells, statice, everlasting, boxwood, chenille cord and Christmas greens, ferns and mistletoe. Julius and Gustave Ludwig had an assortment of Christmas greens, including large branches of the strikingly beautiful Dahoon holly from northern Florida, also flowers. John Bader had a magnificent specimen of English holly, scarlet all over with berries; also an assortment of palms, araucarias, screw pines, begonias, azaleas and cut flowers. Randolph & McClements had big plants of the Anna Foster and Piersoni ferns, and Schenley park sent some pretty Lorraine begonias.

Altogether there was a very nice exhibition and abundant food for thought and discussion, and we did discuss things quite lively, too. Nothing very new, either in materials or make-up, was elicited. The growing scarcity of ground pine, hence higher price, was talked about. All expected a big Christmas trade, so all were happy.

The Cut Flower Co. declared they had perhaps the finest green boxwood ever offered for sale, and Mr. Clarke waxed warm when he assured the boys that his folks had everything in the line of Christmas materials on hand that could be found anywhere. John Bader said he would sell that holly for $5, as he had lots more of it at home. Some of the boys tried to squeeze out of him how much he paid for it in Holland; they wanted to know what profits he was making, but John didn't tell all he knew. He urged, however, that holly just as good could be grown in our southern states.

Jackson Dawson, superintendent of Arnold Arboretum, Boston, sent a lot of very bright and beautiful haw, holly, barberry and other hardy berries that might be used to good advantage in winter decorations. They were full of suggestions and much admired.

The Lorraine begonias were complained of as being a little soft for a rough and ready Christmas trade, and that they don't last long in dwellings. Mr. Meyer, of Robert Craig & Son, Philadelphia, was present and told us that in his town the growers pack the Lorraines, ready for retail delivery, so that there is no time lost in the stores in this work. A telephone message brings in the plants, all clean and packed as fast as a horse can trot into town. And they should be grown cool for some time before shipment.

Mr. Meyer brought on a lot of sample palms, ferns, crotons and other plants with him from Craig's and had them spread out in the room in his hotel. When he saw what kind of meetings the florists here have he felt like kicking himself because he hadn't brought his plants into the meeting room, and we, too, felt like kicking him because he hadn't told us in time about them.

Geddis & Blind, a firm of retail florists, were very much wrought up about the way the funeral directors have of squeezing discounts out of the florists and how tardy they are in paying their bills. A committee of three, namely Mr. Geddis, Ernest Ludwig and E. C. Reine-man, was appointed to look into the matter and report with recommendations at the next meeting.

Four new members were elected and one proposed.

The subject for our January meeting is to be roses. W. F.

ON THE BASIS OF QUALITY.

The following article from Printers' Ink, the journal for advertisers, is worthy the careful consideration of every florist, for the truths embodied are as applicable to our trade as any other:

This much can be said in behalf of advertising which seeks to win the trade of those who will pay reasonable prices for the better grades of goods, as against advertising based upon cheap goods and low prices. When a customer has once been educated to quality he will seldom return to the masses who seek shoddy and sham goods at split-penny prices. Teach a man to wear good clothes, to drink pure liquors and wines, to register at a high-class hotel; teach a woman to buy solid furniture, to demand the best grades of food and to patronize a dressmaker who is an artist; teach them both to spend money with a reasonably open hand for necessities or pleasures, and their spending capacity has been permanently increased. Rather than revert to the bargain-hunters, they will increase their earning capacity, and the store that appeals merely to the desire to save pennies will seldom win them away from the store that makes worth the first consideration and pennies the last.

It must be admitted, of course, that hundreds of retail advertisers are located in communities where quality arguments would be out of the question—ruinous in fact. Yet there are many depending wholly upon price arguments in communities that would respond quickly to a campaign of education in the buying of quality commodities. The great force behind the advertiser who preaches quality is the capacity of every sort of good merchandise to win its way after introduction.

Quality advertising is sometimes a slow trade-builder, but it builds exceedingly strong. The retailer advertising on a quality basis has several lines of argument. He can show, by plain reasoning, that quality goods are better than bargain commodities, and he can also demonstrate the points wherein cheap goods fail, and how costly they are in the long run. He can show readers that notwithstanding the apparent saving of twenty-five or fifty cents or a dollar, it is impossible to get something for nothing in the world of business—that all merchandise is sold by a hard and fast business system that makes it impossible for a merchant to give five dollars for three—that there is evermore a decided hole in a bargain. He can demonstrate that the difference between two grades of a commodity is accurately determined by experts long before they are offered to consumers.

Arguments of this sort will hardly fill a store with people the day after the adv. is printed, but they lay a permanent foundation for lasting trade. Quality has been behind nearly every business house that has built up a solid reputation and is behind some of the greatest advertising campaigns—if not behind those that make the most noise, at least behind those that will go farthest. Many a retailer who is now using publicity on a price-cutting, competitive basis, would find through systematic experiment that his community is far more susceptible to quality arguments and prices than he has ever suspected.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

THE Royal Horticultural Society has given an award of merit for Dracæna Pere Charon to L. J. Draps-Dorn, Laeken, Brussels. It is so well proportioned and so brilliantly colored that it is likely to become extremely popular. The leaves are about five inches across at their broadest and from a foot to eighteen inches long. The younger central leaves are brilliant scarlet and pink, and the scarlet coloring is also very pronounced on the older leaves, accompanied by dark green.

ASPARAGUS plumosus cristata received an award of merit from the Royal Horticultural Society July 21. This is a dwarf-growing variety with the tips of the frond-like growths both divided and crested in a manner well known to fern-lovers, and as seen in gymnogrammes and pterises. It has lost the climbing habit, and makes a handsome pot plant about eighteen inches or two feet high.

THE beautiful double white stock, White Christmas, can be had in bloom for Christmas by planting the seed about the middle of April.

HOLLYHOCKS.—As yet no means of effectually preventing the spread of the puccinia by which the disease is caused when it has become established upon the plant has been discovered, but plants raised from seeds are practically free from the attack of the puccinia until after they have produced their first flower spikes, and with care in saving the seed the several varieties reproduce themselves quite true, both in form and color. Where so many people err in hollyhock culture is being far too niggardly in giving space to the plants, and manure to the roots. Abundance of air about them, and a freedom of growth which can only be obtained by liberal cultivation, are the secrets of success.

DIRECT fertilizers contain elements which, added to the soil, are at once available as food for plants; such, for example, is nitrate of soda. Indirect fertilizers may be material of which the soil is not destitute, and which is not in itself a plant-food, but which acts on the matters already in the land, and changes some of them from the unavailable to the available form; lime and marl may be classed among these substances.

IF IT were necessary for a manure to contain all the food needed for plant growth, fourteen elements would have to be present to make it complete. But most fertile soils contain an abundance of at least ten of these elements; the only ones often deficient being nitrogen, potash, and phosphoric acid, and, sometimes, lime.

IT HAS been fully demonstrated that all of these essential elements must be present in the soil in sufficient quantity, and in suitable form, to ensure fertility and the successful growth of plants. A deficiency of any one of them will diminish production and prevent a profitable crop, causing the soil to appear exhausted when in reality it lacks but a single substance. This partial, or one-sided, exhaustion is the common condition of what is called "worn-out soils."

CARBON comprises about one-half of the solid constituents of plants, and is wholly derived from the carbonic acid of the air; this is absorbed by the leaves, and decomposed in their green cells by the action of light, the carbon being retained in the plant tissues for building up the structure, while the oxygen is again set free. Of the element carbon nature always provides an abundant supply in an available form for all the necessities of the plant. But the growing crop, of whatever its character, cannot absorb and make use of this carbon unless there is an available supply of mineral substances, potash, lime, and phosphoric acid in the soil.

WATER is by far the most abundant constituent of all growing plants. This element is nearly all derived from the soil, being absorbed by the roots, and carries with it into the tissues of the plant, in solution, all the ash constituents, and most of the nitrogen which the plant contains. It serves also as a carrier by which the products assimilated are transferred to the places in the plant where they are needed; and finally by its decomposition supplies nearly all of the gaseous elements of oxygen and hydrogen to the plant. It is thus evident that successful gardening is more dependent upon a proper supply of moisture in the soil than to any other factor. Water has, therefore, been called by an eminent writer "the paramount fertilizer."

I wish to state that I am well pleased with Scott's Manual, which I got last year. It is very helpful. No florist should be without one. JOHN L. MEYER, Devon, Pa.

Trade Notes of Interest.

October weather in December has a tendency to hurt the floral trade, especially in the cut flower department, and consequently business in that line has been rather quiet in Denver for the past few weeks, but notwithstanding these conditions everybody is busy getting ready for Christmas. Up to quite recently the cut flower market has been overstocked, but the commission house has been the means of getting a lot of surplus stock moved out of the city, which would otherwise have been thrown away. Mr. Waterbury's enterprise is yet in its infancy, and time alone will demonstrate the necessity of such an establishment in the Rocky mountain region, but if a comprehensive and impartial attention to the interests of the various growers is all that is required he will make it pay.

The plant trade is becoming an extensive feature in the retail stores and good stock is always in demand at paying prices. Just now cyclamens are taking the lead and those from the Park Floral Company greenhouses are certainly fine. Mr. Sked, who is foreman at this establishment, has given the hybridization of this valuable winter flowering plant close attention for many years, and is now producing many new shades, as well as some very large semi-double varieties. It is astonishing what results can be obtained from close attention to the culture of this plant. Some of the plants grown at this establishment I have known to carry 100 flowers at one time, and some of them have sold as high as $3 at Christmas. Plants now in the greenhouse twelve to fifteen months old are now retailing at $2 each. Lorraines and poinsettias are also in a high state of perfection at this establishment and preliminary sales have demonstrated their unceasing popularity.

The Colfax Avenue Floral Company is well represented in plants, especially the cyclamens, which are fine specimens, only of the old fashion types.

The Scott Floral Co. hung up its shingle in a large storeroom in the Masonic Temple last week. Phil's big window of twenty feet was quite attractive with poinsettias, backed up with an eight foot wreath of galax, the whole artistically associated with palms, ferns and southern smilax.

Emil Glauber, of Montclair, is stocking up the retailers with a fine lot of plumosus. Being anxious to learn how he produced such fine stock, I visited his greenhouse recently and found other things of greater interest to the fraternity. His plumosus are grown under lath screens during summer and removed into a cool house before frost, where they are thoroughly hardened. They are mostly in 5-inch and represent at retail from $1 to $1.50 each, and sell readily.

Mr. Glauber has been the only extensive grower of the Chatenay rose in the locality and this year he is more jubilant than ever over his success, as he has certainly surpassed all his previous efforts. He has three houses in the most perfect state of health and all coming in for Christmas. He informs me that he cuts fifty per cent more good flowers from this variety than he does from any other, and gets a better price than for any other tea, and they have proven a more healthy and freer grower than other teas. This point is worthy of consideration. He is now ready for potting 10,000 two-eyed cuttings. A peculiarity of this rose is that the select blooms, which come from the strong bottom breaks, lack the color and durability of the other grades. Can any of your readers explain this? I also saw at this place a fine lot of 'mums for Christmas. Among them the old favorite Minnie Wanamaker, which Mr. Glauber says he will not give up for many of the later introductions. He also has a fine lot of Maud Dean, Yellow Eaton and White Bonnoffon. This variety is very well done so far, and will be perfect for holiday trade. This mum is a winner when well done, as pearly and white as Ivory and as large as its relative, the Major, and a splendid keeper, either cut or on the plant.

The Park Floral Company took down its sign, on December 5, from where it has been so many years, and where the best floral trade has been done in Denver at any time of its history. Their new store on Broadway is a jewel, set as it were, in a circle of modern construction and the first of its character ever attempted in this part of the west. A few years ago, when the Mauffs built their marble palace in connection with their greenhouses on Capital Hill, we thought they were getting away ahead of the times, but time has proven different, and their attractive exterior has tempted many to view the interior. But for modern equipment and adaptability to every-day use, I think the lead must be given to the newer establishment. The window is redecorated each day. The evening decoration to catch the eye of the theater goers and others who live in and frequent the large hostleries adjacent to the store. E. Gillis, a young and aspiring artist, is in charge here and is given every encouragement to display and develop his taste in window and other decorations.

Benson's Enchantress are the sensation of the season. There is no trouble selling them at a profitable price; none less than $1.50 per dozen. He plants his stock on the benches early in the summer, preferring to cut good flowers in October than poor ones from old stock in June and July, as he thinks this system of growing stock at a fancy price in fall and winter overbalances the loss of throwing away poor stock in summer, which has paid for itself the previous winter.

Christmas material is beginning to arrive and, as usual, becomes a nuisance to the legitimate florist, who has other branches to attend to. This branch of the trade is getting out of the hands of the florists out here, and the street peddler is selling it for one-half less than such material brought ten years ago.

A new aspirant in the Christmas branch of the business has put in its appearance here quite recently, known as the California pepper, and I think it will hold its own with many of the other materials on the market. It has a graceful, drooping habit, clean, healthy foliage and glossy carmine red berries, retains its freshness a long time and is apparently a good shipper.

Vegetable Forcing.

SILVERDALE, PA.—William Allabough's greenhouse is in very good condition at present. His chief product during the winter is tomatoes.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Peter Bright has built four large greenhouses in the trucking neighborhood at Rogers Park and has a nice crop of lettuce.

LAWRENCE BECKER, north of Chicago, who last year had his place in carnations, has all the twelve houses in lettuce this season and says he is doing very well indeed.

CHICAGO, December 9.—Cucumbers, 50c to $1.50. Cauliflower, $1 to $2.25 per barrel. Egg plant, $2 to $2.25 box. Head lettuce, $4 to $8 barrel. Leaf lettuce, 30c to 35c case. Mushrooms, 15c to 40c pound. Radishes, 20c to 50c dozen bunches.

LETTUCE LEAF ROT.

Enclosed you will find a sample of diseased lettuce. I would like to know the cause and remedy, if any, for the trouble is spreading.

A. J. S.

The disease affecting the sample of lettuce sent is a very common one. It is of the fungous order, the name usually applied being leaf rot. As a rule the disease seldom attacks the plants until nearing maturity, i. e., after the hearts are pretty well formed. But, from the early stage at which it has struck the sample sent, it would appear that the conditions under which it was grown must have been admirably adapted to the development of the disease.

The conditions under which it would best develop are a soil containing an abundance of humus, and more or less sour, through careless watering, and a close and humid atmosphere. To avoid these conditions as much as possible fresh manure should not be used in the soil and what manure is used should be well incorporated with the soil. Sterilizing the soil has been found advantageous in fighting this disease, but this cannot always be conveniently done. A good freezing will come pretty near accomplishing the same end. Air must be given on all possible occasions. The fact that the lettuce is being grown under artificial conditions should impress upon the cultivator the necessity of trying to supply the natural conditions as far as possible. I have never seen an instance of this disease on plants grown in the open air. A close and humid atmosphere is not only apt to develop fungous diseases, but is sure to promote soft growth. This proves that judicious airing will not only keep the disease in check, but will build up the tissues of the plants and enable them to resist the disease. Soft growth would also result if too high a temperature were kept up.

The lowering of the temperature in this case would help to check the disease. A night temperature of from 35 to 40 degrees, with a rise of from 15 to 20 degrees by day, would promote firm growth and help eliminate the trouble. Watering should be done on bright days only, and done in the morning so as to get the house well dried up before closing time. There is also a good deal in the variety grown. Boston Market and its several variations are most generally employed. Glass House belongs to this class and is the best we have tried as a disease resister, but all the head varieties are more or less subject to this same trouble and if it is not absolutely necessary to have a head lettuce I would advise the inquirer to try Grand Rapids. This is the easiest grown and quickest maturing lettuce that we have.

MUSHROOMS.

After the bed is made up, as described last week, it must be allowed to stand until the heat recedes to below 90 degrees. It is not safe to insert the spawn until it has come below that figure. It is of the utmost importance that the spawn be thoroughly fresh. It is very disappointing when, after all the trouble spent on making up the bed, etc., the spawn fails to run and no crop results. Spawn will keep its vitality for a considerable time if kept perfectly dry, but it does not take much damp to render it useless. So it is safest to procure fresh spawn every season from some reliable dealer and avoid disappointment.

The spawn comes in the form of bricks and should be broken up, into pieces about two inches square. These pieces should be inserted into the bed in holes about three inches deep and five or six inches apart, the holes being filled over the spawn with the material composing the bed. When the temperature has fallen to about 75 degrees, which will be in a week or ten days, a covering of about two inches of good loam should be given. This loam should be moist but not wet, and will be all the better if it has been kept in a warm place for a day or two before using, so as not to have it too cold.

The soil should be beaten, so as to present an even surface, but not beaten hard, especially if it should be a little wet. Hard beating would have a tendency to make the temperature of the bed rise higher than desired. It will rise a little in any case, but if it does not exceed 80 degrees there should be no danger of the spawn burning. A covering of clean straw should be given about a week later to help conserve both heat and moisture.

If the proper temperature and suitable atmospheric conditions are maintained, mushrooms ought to show in about seven weeks from time of spawning. When they appear the straw covering should be removed. Watering should be unnecessary if the proper amount of atmospheric moisture is being supplied, but if the bed should become dry water will have to be given and should be applied at a temperature of 80 degrees; but the grower should try if possible to get along without needing to apply water.

W. S. CROYDON.

WAUSAU, WIS.—M. Phillips has built another house, 22x125, and put in a new boiler. His brother, Peter, is here from the old country, and will go to work for Mr. Phillips.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—Wm. Dittman has recently been to Chicago and it is reported to have been for the purpose of examining the latest styles of greenhouse construction, preparatory to enlarging his own plant.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres. N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres. F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

NURSERYMEN are reported to be looking for American elms in the larger sizes.

H. N. ALBAUGH, of Phoneton, O., has been re-elected president of the Montgomery County Horticultural Society.

WM. A. PETERSON is now a director in the State Bank of Chicago, one of the city's largest financial institutions.

JAS. MCVITTY, proprietor of the River-view Nursery, Geneva, O., has shipped several carloads of stock to Rochester.

CLARENCE WEDGE, of Albert Lea, Minn., has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his wife, who died December 2.

JAS. HARTSHORNE, of Joliet, states that he has a plantation of Peonia festiva maxima on the St. Louis World's Fair grounds.

A. VON HOLDERBECKE, state commissioner of horticulture of Washington, has been destroying eastern nurserymen's stock in such quantities that he has practically driven them out of the state and they are threatening suits for damages.

REBECCA J. PINKLEY, of Springfield, Ill., has brought action for damages against the Spaulding Nursery and Orchard Co., to recover $5,000 for alleged personal injuries. She claims to have fallen on some defective steps on the grounds of the nursery company.

A MACHINE for wrapping oranges and other fruits with paper has recently been perfected, and is being installed in some of the large orchards and packing-sheds of California and Florida. The machine is run either by hand or power, and has a capacity of 25,000 to 40,000 oranges per day. The paper is fed from a roll, and the machine will wrap fruit from the size of marbles upwards. With such a machine the cost of wrapping is much reduced.

FRANKFORT, KY.—Congleton Brothers' greenhouse was destroyed by fire on the morning of November 27. The loss was total, no insurance.

LESLIE, N. J.—M. F. Smith and others have incorporated the Dogwood Hardy Gardens, to do a general florist and nursery business here.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS!

BERRIES AND BERRIES.

The Botanical Society of Western Pennsylvania had a large and very spirited and happy meeting Thursday evening, December 3, in one of the lecture rooms of the Carnegie Institute, Schenley Park, Pittsburgh. The subject under discussion was "Our Native Evergreens, Winter Berries and Christmas Flowers," and to illustrate the object in view a central table running the whole length of the hall was completely covered with berries of many kinds, flowers and plants. Jackson Dawson, of the Arnold Arboretum, of Harvard University, sent thirty-nine distinct kinds of berries of hardy trees and shrubs; from Dr. Galloway and G. W. Oliver, of the experimental grounds of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., came a large assortment of hardy berries and some very interesting flowers; John Dunbar, of Highland Park, Rochester, N. Y., sent forty-one kinds of hardy winter berries; Prof. Medsger, of Albion, Westmoreland county, brought an assortment of all of the evergreen, sprays of trees and shrubs and ferns and other denizens of the woods and mountains in his region.

A. Schuthels, College Point, N. Y., sent such palms and flowers as are popular at Christmas; the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Company presented cut flowers and immortelles; J. & G. Ludwig, Allegheny market, a lot of Christmas greens; John Bader, a magnificent specimen of imported English holly in full berry, and the Phipps Conservatory a few little plants. H. J. Heinz Co. sent an exhibit of the various jams, preserves, etc., made by them from berries, both popular and technical.

Select Councilman James J. Booth, an ex-president of the society, supplied a very liberal assortment of "berries" that delighted the young folks a good deal more than the barberries, haws and rosehips so plentiful on the table. They included different kinds of grapes, raisins, currants and cranberries, all of which we know very well are berries, but when he spread before them baskets of oranges, lemons, grape fruit, tomatoes, peppers, egg plant fruits, and the like and told them that these, too, were true berries, a smile of incredulity crept over the audience. But several botanists confirmed the fact, and the eminent surgeon, Dr. W. R. Hamilton, declared that water melons and pumpkins also were berries. Prof. H. Holbrook, superintendent of the South Side High School, facetiously took exception to any such a science that would urge that his Thanksgiving pumpkin pie was a Marblehead berry pie, and that the refreshing "wata" million of the Georgian daisy was simply a rattlesnake berry, but he was glad that no one could confute the fact that the mistletoe and the holly were true berries, and he hovered so long and lovingly over the memory of the white berried parasite that a bevy of Normal girls handed the learned patriarch a sprig of it. But Prof. Medsger insisted that the holly "berry" isn't a berry at all; it is a drupe and among fruits belongs to the same class as the plums and cherries.

Henry H. Negley dwelt upon the beauty of berried plants and was enthusiastic over the profusion and vivid showing of the Yaupon and Dahoon holly of northern Florida and the Gulf states; and the berry-like fruits of the pepper tree in California. Great sprays of these were on the table.

Rev. Dr. D. C. Martin had a good word for the jams and preserved fruits before him; he had eaten of and could vouch for them all. But it took a long stretch of imagination to admit that the chetney and tabasco sauce in the bottles on the table were berries, or, to please the botanists, that the tomato-soup or canned tomatoes were put up berries. Verily, verily, much learning doth make one mad.

Ex-President Dr. T. D. Davis urged everybody to eat berries, and lots of them, for they are a delicious and healthful food, and not bother about the scientific definition of a berry.

The president called attention to the fact that the spread of winter berries on the table was the fullest he had ever seen; it contained 117 distinct species, and still not one of them was grown in Pittsburgh. The utility of these berries was twofold, first in an ornamental sense, and, secondly, as food for the birds in winter.

The meeting was an exceedingly enthusiastic one and did not adjourn until 11 o'clock. Before going the president appointed a committee distribute the fruits and flowers among the audience, so every one carried away a happy reminder of one of the most delightful meetings ever held by the society. Mistletoe was at a premium, and on the cars going home, freely did the high school girls swap their oranges and grapes for sprigs of the inspiring parasite.

TORONTO, ONT.—R. Mearns says he has had a good year and is looking forward to a large holiday trade.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—The business formerly conducted by the Springfield Floral Co. is now going as the Springfield Seed Co. The management is the same.

THE fine American Beauty roses used in making the picture on our title page were kindly contributed for the purpose by Messrs. Sievers & Boland, San Francisco.

DECATUR, ILL.—The Decatur Horticultural Company has been licensed to incorporate with $2,500 capital stock, to "cultivate flowers, plants, vegetables and sprouts." The incorporators named are Oscar B. Mueller, George W. Neyhard and Joseph Charoune.

MISTLETOE!

Of what value is Mistletoe with the berries and foliage nearly all off, the original bunch broken up into small pieces which are unattractive rather than attractive, and which cannot be made into an attractive form, and sells only to those customers who buy it "merely because it is Mistletoe?"

Mistletoe in its natural form, handsome well-berried bunches, is beautiful and attractive and sells on these merits. It is true that some customers cannot afford a large bunch, but for these a small sprig may be broken off of the outer edge without destroying the original bunch or the effectiveness of it. The sprig broken off is pretty and pleasing because it is in perfect form, having been correctly cut, packed, shipped and displayed. You have pleased a customer. With them quality counts. Why not with you? There is profit for you in such stock.

I ship this one grade only. By express C.O.D., with the privilege of examination before you accept it. My risk, not yours.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The annual report of the Oakland Cemetery Association, presented November 30, shows the sales from the greenhouses to have been $5,790.70.

CINERARIA STELLATA.

Having heard of the different ways of culture of this beautiful and very useful greenhouse annual, I am just giving the very easiest and most successful way that I have grown it myself for a number of years, thinking that it will, if tried benefit the readers of this most useful paper, writes C. W. Easton in The Gardening World.

The first and one of the most particular parts is to clear an empty space, say under the greenhouse staging, so that there is plenty of light and air. Then give a good sprinkling of sifted soil about one inch or two inches deep, and then pick out the best colors and healthiest plants, as they gradually fade, and stand them under the stage on to the soil you have ready for them until the seeds have dropped. Give them a shake and throw the old plants away, and then give a good watering under the stage with a fine rose can. Then after they come up give them an occasional water with the rose on to keep them moist, as cinerarias must not be kept too dry or too wet, but with keeping moist they thrive well. Then when they have about three leaves on, pick them out with a small trowel or pointed stick. Then pot, not too firmly into small pots, with soil run through an inch sieve, with a good sprinkling of leaf mold and silver sand. Then stand them in a cold frame, give a good spray finely twice or three times a day with the syringe, and keep close from the bright sun for about three days. Water if required, and gradually put more air on.

In a very short time they will want repotting. This time soil should be two-thirds loam, one leaf mold, silver sand, and a little mortar rubble, not too coarse. To keep the soil open and sweet a little wood ashes would do no harm. If they are fresh, place them back in cold frame, still shaded from the bright sun; then when they get well rooted give them medium strength soot-water about twice a week to keep worms, etc., out of the pots. If required, fumigate with xl all compound for green and brown fly. If the nights are warm during August and September, leave the lights off, as cinerarias will thrive wonderfully if they can get the morning dew, so that shading is put on again before the sun gets too powerful, and that also keeps them sturdy and stronger than if the lights are kept on.

Great care must now be taken to house the plants before severe frosts set in, as the least frost is fatal to all cinerarias. If they are required for house decoration they will require potting again. Great care must be taken not to over-water them during the winter months. In this way I have grown them from one foot to four feet high, but I have found the best way is to let the plant get about one foot high, then pinch the top out when the side shoots are showing, and by normal feeding you can get them three feet high and three feet through.

THE REVIEW is as necessary to the successful florist, as air and water to his plants.—W. W. NASH, Montrose, Pa.

I like your paper very much. It is an educator and a convenience as well. I read it carefully every week, and have from the first.—F. P. AVERY, Tunkhannoch, Pa.

April 16.—Bedding plant exhibition at 4 p. m., followed by regular meeting. Papers and discussion on bedding plants, prices, etc.

May 7.—Third allied trades meeting. Subjects, "Fertilizers" and "Coal."

Papers by specialists in these subjects. Discussions by the club.

May 21.—Exhibition of cut blooms and plants at 4 p. m., followed by last regular meeting of the club for the season. Various meetings for the summer will be announced later.

The club will be pleased to receive and exhibit at any meeting or exhibition any new flower or plant, especially well grown specimens of older varieties, or in fact anything of special interest to members of any branch of the trade. Certificates of merit will be awarded to worthy new varieties whenever shown.

WE are in receipt of Vol. VII, Part II, of the American Park and Outdoor Art Association, containing the reports of standing committees presented at the Buffalo meeting last July. The pamphlet is principally notable for John C. Olmsted's report on checking the abuses of billboard advertising and the reasonable views he expresses.

ALKALI IN WATER.

Please let me know if there is any way to make soft water from hard. We have here all hard water and full of alkali, so that we cannot use it on our stock.

P. J. K.

There is more to this query than appears on the face of it. Any method which I could recommend would be too expensive for a florist to adopt. The best and surest method is to distil the water, but, of course, that is out of the question. Some acids will neutralize the alkali but this is a question for an expert chemist. Would advise P. J. K. to forward a sample of the water on his place along with his query to the faculty of the Agricultural College of his state. They, as a rule, are willing to lend their aid in such cases.

RIBES.

A BROKEN GASKET.

I have a sectional boiler that was put up this year and there is a flaw in one of the gaskets (asbestos ring) that goes between the sections to make them water tight. I think the gasket is probably broken. The water gets out by the expansion and contraction caused by the heat upon the iron. I was told it would probably tighten up when firing became a steady thing, but it has not so far. Whenever the boiler cools off it continues to drip into the ash pit and soaks the ashes. As it is too late in the season to replace the gasket with a new one without a great risk to my plants, can you suggest any way of making the joint tight? The bolts are as tight as I can screw them up and still, as I have said, the action of the fire causes the joint to leak, especially when the fire is out or low. What I want to know is, shall I let it alone for the present or is there any danger of the leak getting worse? I don't know if I have made this clear, but I shall be glad to get advice on the matter. The leaking joint is near the fire box, but does not hurt the fire at present, as it runs down the side of the ash pit.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

Work of Committees.

Chicago, November 28.—Miss Helen Frick, pink, shown by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., scored 87 points commercial scale.

Cincinnati, November 28.—No. 2-16-01, bright deep pink, incurved Japanese, shown by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., scored 83 points commercial scale.

FRED H. LEMON, Sec'y.

Valuable Records.

Several notes appeared in the trade papers shortly after the New York chrysanthemum show, referring to the gift of Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, Mich., to the chrysanthemum society of America. As was stated at that time this gift consists of a list of all the varieties of chrysanthemums introduced in America since the early 80's. These records have now become the property of the C. S. A. and are in the hands of the secretary. The care with which the records have been compiled, the earnest and painstaking effort which has been made to cover the ground thoroughly, and the eminently practical and convenient manner in which the records are gotten up, call for the highest commendation from all lovers of the chrysanthemum throughout America.

A brief explanation of the system followed, may be of interest. The well known card index system is used. White cards designate varieties raised in America, blue cards imported varieties, and synonyms are placed on yellow cards. The name of the variety is given, followed by the name of the introducer, and the raiser, when possible. The year it was sent out in the United States and the description complete the card. Each year the secretary will add cards covering all the introductions of the year, thus keeping the records up to date. When the report of the convention, held in New York November 10, is published, a copy of this list will be included and will become the property of each member of the C. S. A.

FRED H. LEMON, Sec'y.

THE Mount Greenwood Cemetery Association sends to lot owners a neatly printed circular suggesting the appropriateness of placing holly wreaths on graves at Christmas. An order blank is enclosed and the prices quoted are those at which holly wreaths are ordinarily sold in Chicago.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis Mo., June, 1904.

VISITED PHILADELPHIA: W. J. Fosgate, Santa Clara, Cal., en route home.

VISITED ST. LOUIS.—A. D. Warren, representing Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky.

SEEDSMEN usually are not backward in quoting prices. If they feel diffident about doing so at this time there are reasons for it.

It is stated that a coming seed novelty was "grown on the plains of Abraham, and watered with Job's tears." It should be a winner.

SHIPMENTS of beans on contract orders are unusually delayed this year, owing to the difficulty of getting them threshed out in many localities.

THIS year there seems to be considerable anxiety lest farmers who grow sweet corn and other crops on contract deliver to the wrong parties.

CHICAGO.—Judging from the quantity of Christmas trees, etc., in and about their warehouses, all tagged for shipment, W. W. Barnard & Co. must be having a splendid Christmas trade.

VISITED CHICAGO: W. J. Fosgate, of Santa Clara, Cal.; Arthur G. Lee, of Arthur G. Lee & Bro., Fort Smith, Ark.; H. M. Clair, representing the Planet Jr., goods, Philadelphia; C. Reno Root, Denver, manager for F. Barteldes & Co.

BOUQUET green is arriving from the woods in much less than the usual quantities, but probably enough for orders at prevailing prices, $7.50 to $9 per 100 pounds in the Chicago market. Holly is coming fast and of good average quality.

SOME sweet corn is changing hands throughout the east at $7.50 and upward per bushel. Many dealers having thought early prices too high, have not yet purchased, and canners are largely short of supplies. Very little corn matured for seed in this section.

THE sweet corn values named in this column three weeks ago continue to prevail and the outlook points to even higher prices. The feeling in the east is easier than in the west, but as the returns from plantings in the west, where the main part of the crop usually comes from, are so far below what they should be, nothing can well prevent extremely high prices.

PHILADELPHIA.—The recent cold snap which extended as far south as middle Florida, has brought many rush orders from that state, beans and tomato seed being in particular demand. Nearly every mail brings inquiries for cucumber, melon and wax beans. Judging from the inquiries the standard green pod beans are quite as scarce as the wax sorts. There will evidently be an unprecedented demand the coming season for tomato and cucumber seed. As an evidence of how eagerly these seeds are sought by the local seedsmen, a small

New Jersey farmer recently wrote five houses here on the same day offering about fifty pounds each tomato and White Spine cucumber seed at $1 per pound and received five telegrams all within forty-five minutes for the seed. One of the younger houses secured the prize, being first to land their telegram. Certain western seed growers are out with offers of cucumber and squash seeds at about 500 per cent above contract prices, seed which they state they "secured from parties who grow on their own account." As these are offered in lots ranging from 350 to 1,000 pounds each, comment is unnecessary.

ARTHUR G. LEE, of Fort Smith, Ark., reports the outlook for seed business in the south and southwest as being first rate. It is expected that onion sets will be in good demand after the first of the year. The slump in price after purchases had been made last season has had a tendency to keep dealers from ordering any sets in advance this year. The seed business in Arkansas is growing and the opportunities for branching out are of the best.

DUMMY INQUIRIES.

We are in receipt of the following letter from one of the best known eastern seed houses:

This is the season when the seedsman who wants to know the prices at which his neighbors are purposing to catalogue seeds is sending out his dummy lists. The past week we have received two in familiar handwriting, one purporting to come from Samuel Allen, Lansing, Mich., and the other from H. A. Merrill, of Saginaw, Mich. Both of these parties are expecting to go largely into trucking the coming season, and they are hoping to sell some seeds to their neighboring truckers. They apologize for wanting prices so early, but they do not want to be delayed in their spring planting. They promise orders by the last of November. Following this is a list of nearly everything in the catalogue, ranging in quantity from a quarter of a pound to three pounds. Allen signs himself, "Answer quickly, yours for business." Merrill signs himself, "Now, if you want my order hurry up and quote me low prices quick and maybe I can give you the order. Yours for great big crops," etc.

We are making some little inquiry to find out what seedsmen these parties are clerks for and when we get the information we will write again. JOHNSON & STOKES.

The Market.

Trade for last week was very good and the outlook for its continuance for the remainder of December is very encouraging. Debutantes filled the social calendar of last week; the demand for novelties in choice cut flowers and other good stock for debutante bunches was quite heavy. The present supply and demand of this market is about equal, except on white carnations, which are scarce and not nearly enough to supply the demand. Chrysanthemums are still about, mostly the ordinary kinds, but they sell at fair prices. The supply of Beauties has shortened up considerably. The ones received are of extra fine quality and touch $5 per dozen. The best quality of Maids and Brides are scarce, the minor grades very plentiful.

This is a poor valley market; the demand is very spasmodic and for that reason I judge none of our growers force them in any great amount. However, more valley is being used here every year and the increasing demand should induce some one, locally, to supply the market throughout the season.

Various Notes.

T. M. Ulam & Co. had the decoration for the Crucible Club dinner to Gen. Miles.

The scarcity of bouquet green is stimulating the demand for boxwood sprays and laurel wreathing.

On Monday the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. received a car load of wild smilax, which came to them by express. Mr. Clarke reports the demand for it steadily ily on the increase, for it is being used more and more by the country trade.

At John Bader's plant and greenhouse everyone is busy preparing stock for shipment for the holiday trade. Mr. Bader has a fine collection of Christmas plants, ferns and palms.

C. T. Siebert had the decoration for the Mellon reception. Ernest Zieger supervised the work.

T. P. Langhans is confined to his home with an attack of the grip.

The demand for Christmas decorative material is very good. Red immortelle bells and moss wreaths are again a feature this season.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club was not very well attended, but the display of decorative plants and material was elaborate and good. Plants and material did double service, as they were exhibited at the botanical meeting on Thursday night following the Florists' Club meeting. Hoo-Hoo.

Fire Destroys Greenhouses.

John Pickering, proprietor of the Willow Bank Greenhouses, situated on Tibbits avenue, in Brunswick, just east of the city line, sustained a severe loss by fire December 1. The fire originated about 3 o'clock in the roof of a workshop connected with the greenhouses and was caused by a defective flue. The fire quickly spread over the workshop and made its way to a connecting house leading to the greenhouses. The shop, which was a wooden structure, afforded fine material for the flames, and the connecting houses and the greenhouses fell victims to the heat and flames. But three of the seven large houses were saved.

The residents of the vicinity provided as much assistance as possible, and members of the Sycaway fire company worked hard to counteract the flames. This was the only protection there was at hand. While the fire was kept from three of the buildings, this was no source of protection to the stock, as the entire stock was practically destroyed. Mr. Pickering said that his loss was between $4,000 and $6,000. The insurance amounted to only $600, and this was on his tools.

PLANT NOTES.

Two Worthy Natives.

Among the most beautiful of our native flowering plants is the California azalea. It is a wonder that more of them are not used by our landscape gardeners. During the latter part of May and during June and July our mountainous country from Oregon on the north to southern California on the south, especially along the banks of mountain streams, is covered for miles with the bushes, the rich green foliage of which is often obscured from view by the magnificent clusters of white and yellow, or sometimes pinkish, flowers. The shrubs grow from two to ten feet high and flowers and leaves cluster at the ends of the branches, as is the case with all the azalea family.

They are very easily handled in the winter season. Last year I transplanted about two dozen of them from the Santa Cruz mountains and planted them in the neighborhood of San Francisco. They commenced to bloom early in June and during that month and through July they were the wonder and admiration of the neighborhood.

Farther north we have the California rose bay, Rhododendron Californicum, also a gorgeous native flower. Unlike the azalea, to which it is closely related, it inhabits the higher lands and is often found on bleak mountain sides. It is also an evergreen and grows from three to fifteen feet in height. The leaves are from six to eight inches long, resembling, somewhat, those of the Magnolia grandiflora. The flowers are rosy pink in color and are borne in very large clusters.

To see a mountain side covered with this gorgeous mass of flowers is a sight never to be forgotten, and I doubt if it can be rivaled anywhere else in America. I do not find them quite so easy to transplant as the azaleas, but they are such a grand shrub that it is well worth the trouble to try to use them as a garden flower. These azaleas and rhododendrons are not fragrant, but they have the odor of the woods around the flowers and foliage that is very suggestive of our beautiful California mountains.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Although it is now the first week in December we have had no cold weather yet. The temperature has been from 55 to 60 degrees during our long nights for the past week. We have had considerable fog and roses have not been very plentiful, but carnations can be had in any quantity, although the prices are gradually climbing. Fancy Lawson and Prosperity are selling wholesale at from 60 to 75 cents per dozen, Cressbrook and Estelle at 50 cents, Crocker and other varieties a shade cheaper and Portia and Scott at 25 cents per dozen. American Beauty can be had at from $2 to $3 per dozen and short-stemmed cheaper. Bride, Maid, Testout, Kaiserin and Liberty are selling at about 75 cents, although some fine stock brings $1 and short and weak-stemmed about half that price. Business, outside of funeral work, has been very quiet since Thanksgiving. The funeral of Samuel Rainey a week ago was a big occasion for many of our florists. There were countless designs and some of them were very elaborate. The Shanahan Floral Co., F. Shibley, Sievers & Boland, Podesta & Baldocchi, F. Pelicano and Thomas H. Stevenson had the bulk of the orders.

Violets do not seem to be as plentiful as we expected after so much rain as we have had and I cannot account for their scarcity. They still wholesale for $1 per dozen bunches, which is about twice their usual price at this time of the year. Mums are not quite so plentiful, but they are still of fair quality. Some very fine outdoor grown Bonnafons and several late white sorts are in good supply. Smilax is very plentiful but maiden-hair fern seems to be in rather short supply at present. Wild ferns and red berries are used in large quantities for decorating in the store windows and everything except the weather makes one think of Christmas.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Trade for Thanksgiving was exceptionally good. There was no perceptible shortage in any line. Violets and carnations led the call and were cleaned up at good figures. There were more urns in the market than were anticipated and prices were unsteady. Plenty of choice blooms went at $1.50 per dozen and inferior grades went begging. Stevia came in quantity and sold well. This is a most popular flower during its season and comes in handy to fill in for any occasion. Some fine violets are in and find a ready market. The call for roses is about equal to demand.

Club Meeting.

A regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held last week. A new constitution and by-laws were adopted, calling for the election of officers annually the first Tuesday in December. The following officers were elected at this meeting: President, W. A. Kennedy; vice-president, F. H. Holton; secretary, H. V. Hunkel; treasurer, C. Dalwig; trustees, J. G. Heitman, F. P. Dilger, C. Zepnick. It was decided to secure the Exposition building for a flower show next fall and a premium list of $1,500 was approved. Doubtless much more will be raised for special prizes. INCOG.

NEW CARNATIONS

We are Now Booking Orders for this Season's Novelties in Carnations

THE PRESIDENT.

NEW FANCY CARNATIONS.

Sensation (Ward). Large, very full bloom. Color scheme one of the most peculiar yet seen among carnations. Ground work of flower white over which is laid broad splashes of yellowish salmon, and upon which broad markings of a deeper salmon pink are laid. Flower three inches in diameter, on long wiry stems. Very free, continuous bloomer. This variety attracts attention wherever seen. Stock limited. $2.50 per doz. $10.00 per 100.

NEW WHITE CARNATION.

Mackinac (Ward): This is a pedigree seedling which has gradually forced its way through our establishment into a prominent position through a sheer determination to produce an enormous quantity of fine, large, full, very fragrant flowers in the early part of the season when other carnations are scarce. The plant is exceptionally floriferous, producing more blooms during the early part of the season than any other white carnation that we have ever grown. Stem is long, wiry, flower fine shape; long, strong calyx. This we would term distinctively a "bread and butter" white carnation. $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

Flamingo (Marquisee): The finest commercial scarlet yet offered. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Albatross (Marquisee): A grand white. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Sunbird (Marquisee): A very prolific yellow. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Nelson Fisher (Fisher): On the style of Lawson but more brilliant in color. Recommended as an improvement on Lawson. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Mrs. M. A. Patten (Fisher): One of the finest variegated sorts yet offered. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Crusader (C. C. Co.): Recommended as a tip top commercial scarlet. $2.50 per doz.; $10.00 per 100; $80.00 per 1000.

Reliance (C. C. Co.): Recommended as the largest and finest

NEW BRILLIANT CRIMSON CARNATION.

The President (Ward): One of the brightest colored, the largest flowered, the best formed, and the longest stemmed among crimson carnations. Enormous bloom, three inches and upwards in diameter, upon perfectly stiff stems 24 inches and upwards long. Very deep, glaucous foliage; strong, vigorous grower; mid-season bloomer. Needs early propagating and does exceptionally well when grown under glass throughout the summer. This is the most striking crimson carnation we have ever grown, and will bring a much higher price than any other crimson on the market on account of its perfectly shaped blooms, its large size, its magnificent coloring and its splendid stem. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

NEW VARIEGATED CARNATION.

Judge Hinsdale (Ward): An exceptionally pleasing sort. Color white heavily laced and edged with bright pink. Effect very pleasing and refreshing. Very large, full, well formed flower three inches in diameter, on an exceptionally strong stem 24 inches and upwards in length. Flower very full, high built; calyx large, long, exceptionally strong and does not burst. Early mid-season bloomer, producing an enormous crop of its immense flowers. Fragrant, splendid keeper, first class shipper, and a tip top all around carnation. Habit very strong, exceptionally vigorous, growth erect and free. Cuttings root well. A great favorite upon the New York market, where it brings the highest prices. Stock not very large. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

NEW CRIMSON CARNATION.

Octoroon (Ward): This variety has been termed by many visitors to our establishment, a "bread and butter" carnation. It resembles "Scott" in habit, the flower being considerably larger than "Scott" in its best days. The bloom is very large, quite full, nicely fringed and splendidly formed. Has a very long, strong calyx which does not burst, and the flower is nicely fragrant. Stems long, strong; plant vigorous, very free, and blooms steadily throughout the season. Considered a first-class variety upon the New York market, where it is in strong demand. Stock limited. $2.50 per doz. $10.00 per 100.

pure white carnation yet offered. $2.50 per doz.; $10.00 per 100; $80.00 per 1000.

White Lawson (C. H. Allen & Jas. Hartshorne): A pure white sport of the Lawson. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Lady Bountiful (Dorner): A prize winning commercial white wherever shown. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

The Belle (Dorner): Another grand white from the well known raiser of so many fine commercial carnations. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Indianapolis (Baur & Smith): Recommended as an extraordinary. fine commercial pink. $3.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PROTECTION FROM FROST.—Although wire netting is not usually classed with the materials suitable for the protection of fruit trees from frost, there can be no doubt that it possesses considerable protective value. In the gardens of Syon House there has been so great a difficulty in keeping the buds of the gooseberry bushes safe from birds during the winter and early spring months, that Mr. Wythes has had a considerable area enclosed with wire netting. The framework is formed with slender posts and strips of deal, and is about five feet high. This is covered with wire netting having an inch mesh, and is a most efficient protection from birds. This year it has been a most efficient protection from frost also, for in April, when the frost was so severe at Syon as to practically destroy the whole of the young gooseberries on the unprotected bushes, not a fruit was injured on the bushes enclosed by the wire structure.

ANEMONE King of the Scarlets was given an award of merit by the Royal Horticultural Society in May. For brilliancy of color it would be hard to find a flower to beat this handsome anemone. The flowers are three inches and more across, quite double, and yet spread out flat. The outer floral segments are large, but sharply pointed, and then come the petaloid stamens laid out in regular circles, one within the other. The whole flower is vivid velvety scarlet. The variety appears to be very free flowering.

THE forty-fourth exhibition and congress of the Pomological Society of France was held at Clermont Ferrand in September.

A SINGLE-FLOWERED garden rose named Blush Rambler has been awarded a gold medal by the National Rose Society. It was secured by crossing Crimson Rambler with The Garland. It bears a profusion of soft blush-pink flowers, each with a small central cluster of yellow stamens. The flowers do not fade off to mauve, as so many of a similar color do, but turn to a paler shade of blush before falling.

BEGONIA Marie Bouchet has been given an award of merit by the Royal Horticultural Society. It is a free-growing begonia that is suitable for basket culture by reason of its long, slender growths. It has scarlet flowers, that are double, but the central segments are curiously waved and twisted, making a distinct elongated rosette that is quite distinct from the usual style of doubling.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL, BY WM. SCOTT.

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business, and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold. Following we print a few extracts from letters received from buyers of the book:

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.
GEORGE M. KELLOGG.
Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual," was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere bagatelle.
OAKLAND, MD. H. WEBER & SONS.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.
CHICAGO. JOHN THORPE.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to aid a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive era of the florists' business.
DAVENPORT, IA. J. T. TEMPLE.

The Florists' Manual is worth five times the price. It is just what a busy florist wants.
COLUMBUS, O. B. BUEHLER & SON.

Am well pleased with the Manual. It is a practical, everyday helper, concise and to the point.
MILWAUKEE, WIS. W. A. KENNEDY.

Am very much pleased with the book; it is very handy for reference.
MACOMB, ILL. F. E. BONHAM.

Unlike so many of our books, it has the very flavor and essence of actual experience.
ITHACA, N. Y. L. H. BAILEY.

We have gotten much valuable instruction from the Florists' Manual and prize it highly.
FRANKLIN, TENN. TRUETT BROS.

Am much pleased with the Manual. It is just what I have been looking for. Something that we can understand, and enjoy reading.
ETNA, PA. M. NAUMAN.

I greatly appreciate the Florists' Manual. It is a splendid text-book.

JOHN WELSH YOUNG.
Germantown, Pa.

The Florists' Manual is a gem. No florist can afford to be without it.
MADISON, N. J. A. J. BAUR.

If everyone has enjoyed your book as I have it's a successful publication. It is different from our usual horticultural works, being plain and concise—just what one wants.
FLUSHING, N. Y. H. D. DARLINGTON.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles alone in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same.

The Market.

Business was none too good during the past week; in fact, it was very poor and reminded one of the summer conditions. The wholesale men had plenty of time to rest and the retailers had little else to do save get out their bills and try to collect. Society has been very quiet. Luckily the supply of stock has been only medium, otherwise there would have been a glut. Chrysanthemums being about out of the market, what few there were sold readily. Carnations were very scarce and, notwithstanding that the demand was not large, many more could have been used. Roses were equal to the demand, but the supply of good stock was not large. Seconds were in over-supply. American Beauties are now coming in larger quantities and there is a good demand for them. Violets are very good property and sell out quickly at increased prices. There is a good demand for callas but very few to be had. Prices on all kinds of stock are rising. The temperature has been low for this season of the year, but it is rising now and warmer weather is promised. This may help rush on a crop for Christmas.

Various Notes.

Saturday is meeting night for the Florists' Society. Several matters of importance will be brought up.

Karl W. Heiser has opened a retail store at Hamilton, O.

B. P. Critchell and Frank Huntsman are both on the sick list, but are doing nicely and will be about again in a few days.

The Rosebank Co. has been showing some very dainty window decorations lately and they have been very much admired.

The two Avondale florists, Ruseoni & Myers and Miss E. Kyrk & Co., are both hustling for the trade of that suburb. Their stores and windows are arranged in the best of taste and both firms are doing good business.

J. A. Peterson is sending in some fine valley, also baby primrose and Primula obconica, which sell on sight at 50 cents and $1 per hundred respectively.

Some orange yellow cosmos which is quite a novelty is being cut by Critchell. This sells well but not at a price high enough to make it a paying crop.

Holly is now being received in large quantities and was never better; $4 per crate is being asked for the best, but no orders are being turned down at $3.50. Club moss is very scarce and $10 per crate is asked, with none to fill orders. In many instances arbor vitae is being used as a substitute. C. J. OHMER.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA.—This is a town of about 2,500 inhabitants and not a large flower consuming community. F. P. Avery, a member of the S. A. F., has two small greenhouses, and a field of about seventy varieties of peonies, some twenty-five varieties recently planted. The past season his nymphaeas made a grand show and he had a nice display of rare dahlias.

AM WELL pleased with the REVIEW and consider it one of the most progressive of trade papers.—GEORGE SMITH, Manchester, Vt.

Indianapolis

THE BEST
BRIGHT PINK CARNATION IN SIGHT. IT NEVER BURSTS.

This will be sure to become a standard commercial variety on account of its fine color, good form, size, stem and floriferousness. Nothing we have ever had on our place could touch it in blooming. Every shoot a flower stem and never off crop. Stands a foot above Lawson throughout the season and is easy to manage. The color is much brighter than Joost but not so dark as Lawson in the dark days of winter. It keeps its bright color.

COME AND SEE IT GROWING.

YOU WILL WANT TO GROW SOME OF IT YOURSELF.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The regular periodical meeting of the Kentucky Society of Florists was held on Tuesday evening, December 1, with a large number of members present. Eight new members were elected and will be initiated on the first Tuesday in 1904. The officers for the ensuing year were elected, as follows: President, Jacob Schulz; vice-president, Herbert Walker; recording secretary, George J. Schulz; financial secretary, Joseph Coenen; treasurer, H. Kunzman; sergeant-at-arms, Adam Heitz; trustee, Henry Fuchs; auditing committee, Messrs. Mann, Schulz and Heitz. There is much interest in the society and we are working to strengthen the organization and work up a fund so that some day we may invite the American Carnation Society or the Society of American Florists to come to Louisville for their annual convention.

Trade was not very brisk just after Thanksgiving. There are still chrysanthemums in the market, but they are nearly gone. Carnations are of greatly improved quality. Louis Kirch, among others, is cutting some fine blooms.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting and exhibition of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held at their rooms in Orange. Rose Mrs. Pierpont Morgan was shown by Peter Duff in its perfection, receiving 90 points. Lager & Hurrell had orchids, cattleyas, cypripediums and dendrobiums, which received a first-class certificate. A certificate was given to John N. May for his new rose, displayed at the November meeting.

In the contest for the past year, for four silver cups, Malcolm Macorie was declared the winner for plants, receiving 904 points; George Smith for fruits, receiving 600 points, and Peter Duff for flowers and vegetables, receiving 904 and 850 points, respectively. The cups were presented by Austin Colgate in the name of the several patrons of the society.

In the annual election following, George Smith was re-elected president unanimously; Dietrick Kindsgrab, vice-president; William Bennett, secretary, and Malcolm Macorie re-elected treasurer; W. Ashmead, Edwin Thomas and Isaac Vance were elected as an arbitration committee.

FLATBUSH, N. Y.

A brief visit at the carnation factory of Jerome A. Suydam developed a hearty welcome and a most interesting sight in the way of new carnations, to which nearly 20,000 square feet of glass is devoted. Here is the home of Amaze, the fine red that amazed the conventionists last February, which will be on exhibition again at Detroit in March. Mr. Suydam has fourteen new varieties, and in fact the entire plant is devoted to his own creations, with the exception of Cerise Queen, Lawson, Scott and Genevieve Lord. This house of Scott is the best of this grand old variety I have seen in an age. The stock here is all wonderfully healthy, not a sign of stem-rot being seen anywhere. His new white seedling will not be sent out until next season. One house is entirely devoted to it and the flowers of this variety and Amaze command high prices in the New York wholesale market. Amaze is a wonder in color, size of flower, profuse blooming and lasting qualities. A grand dark variety, a cross of Amaze and Roosevelt, promises to make a sensation when introduced. It is the best of five new dark ones and easily averages three inches in diameter. A new pink, a cross of Scott and Prosperity, is a very large flower of great merit.

Flatbush is growing rapidly towards these "outskirts" where Mr. Suydam resides and soon the festive trolley will make it easy for visitors to see these novelties at home. John McCormick, the foreman, has been in charge here for fourteen years.

OCEANIC, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society was held at Oceanic, N. J., December 4, with President Turner in the chair. The discussion of the evening was "Sub-soiling," in which most of the members took part. The nomination of officers took place and the following members were nominated: For president, Wm. Turner; vice president, Geo. Hale; secretary, H. A. Kettel; financial secretary, Geo. Kuhn; treasurer, W. W. Kennedy. For the last show $325 in prize money was paid and a goodly balance left on hand. Geo. Hale treated the boys to a box of cigars. All in all it was the liveliest meeting held in a long time.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The demand for cut flowers has been steadily increasing, and the prices are firm as last quoted. Trade so far this season is not to be compared with that of last year, but we are all hoping for a good holiday business.

Roses can be had to fill all demands, but carnations are not so plentiful, and at times it takes lots of hustling to fill orders.

Notes.

C. M. Wagner has had a beautiful window of Chatenay and Sunrise roses, both of which are somewhat new to Cleveland buyers, but Mr. Wagner says they are both good sellers.

Smith & Feters show a red window, poinsettias, red Christmas bells and red immortelle wreaths. It was very attractive.

The Essex Greenhouses are sending in some very fine Beauties that find a ready sale at good prices.

Some fine Meteors were sent in by the F. R. Williams Co. this week. They grow 6,000 plants of it and have been very successful with it in the past.

Kirschner Bros. and Bramley & Son have been quite busy with funeral orders the past week. E.

SALEM, MASS.—Mrs. J. M. Julyn, at the Bridge Street Greenhouses, has recently installed a No. 4 boiler from Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago.

My stock is all sold, and all through the REVIEW. I received many orders that I could not fill and had to return the money. I shall be better prepared next season and as soon as I have anything ready for sale you will hear from me.—ALBERT HAKE, Manchester, Pa.

Two years ago we wrote you to discontinue the REVIEW until such time as McKinley's prosperity should strike the south, and as it has reached our corner now, we hasten to renew our subscription to your valued paper.—A. A. PANTET & Co., Fort Smith, Ark.

CASSIA CORYMBOSA.

For covering bare walls or trellises in the greenhouse this plant is unrivaled and is of easy culture, says the Gardening World. The rich yellow flowers are borne in corymbs during the summer months, and are extremely useful for cutting purposes. The sprays should be cut eighteen inches long for placing in vases, as then the real beauty of the flowers is displayed to advantage. The plant attains to ten or fifteen feet in height, and if accorded liberal treatment soon covers the space allotted to it. Half-ripened shoots are plentiful at this time, and these strike root readily if inserted round the sides of four and one-half inch pots of rich soil composed of equal parts of loam, peat, and leaf-soil, with plenty of sharp sand added to make it porous. Plunge the pots in a hotbed or in the propagating pit and keep well sprinkled.

RECENT DECISIONS.

Judge Funk, in the Circuit Court at South Bend, Ind., has decided that the charging of demurrage for cars held over a stated length of time is legal. Judge Funk cited decisions in Illinois and Georgia, holding that freight in a car is as if stored in a railway warehouse and that the railways have a right to make the same rules governing both situations.

While the word "warrant," especially where the contract of sale of a chattel is reduced to writing, is most generally and appropriately used, still the term is not absolutely necessary to express a warranty by the seller, for the rule is well settled that in sales of personal property no particular form of words is essential to establish or constitute a warranty. Any positive representation, assertion or affirmation made by the seller during the pendency of the negotiations for the sale, not the mere expression of an opinion or belief, which fairly expresses the intention of the seller to warrant the article or property sold to be what it is represented, will constitute an express warranty.—Smith v. Borden, Supreme Court of Indiana. 66 N. E. 681.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—E. Haentze's expenditure this season in enlarging and improving his plant was in the neighborhood of $16,000.

ABUTILONS.

Among plants that occupy a far more prominent position in gardens than they did a generation ago must be included the abutilons, says the Gardeners' Magazine. Their value for different purposes has now been generally proved. Some of the true species, as well as many hybrid forms, are well adapted for training along the rafters or roof of a greenhouse; indeed, the yellow-flowered variety, Golden Fleece, so situated in the conservatory at Kew, has long proved to be one of the most striking features of that structure.

For clothing the back wall of a conservatory, or in a similar position, abutilons have much to commend them, not the least important item being the fact that if the structure is kept fairly warm flowers may be had to a greater or lesser extent throughout the winter. Large plants grown as standards form a notable feature, either in the conservatory or plunged out of doors during the summer, the drooping character of the blossoms being well shown when the plants are treated in this way. Not the least desirable feature of the abutilons is that many of the varieties soon reach an effective size. Lastly, the majority of the different forms can be grown as neat bushes in 6-inch pots, and in this way will flower freely, the restricted root-room being very conducive to the production of flowers, but to ensure success an occasional stimulant is necessary. As cut flowers the pure white variety, Boule de Neige, is appreciated by many, particularly in the formation of wreaths, for it is one of the best of the winter flowerers.

The propagation and culture of abutilons is of the simplest, as cuttings strike root very readily, and seedlings are also easily raised. The plants grow freely in ordinary potting soil if care is taken to give some weak liquid manure from time to time, otherwise if at all starved many of the leaves will quickly drop. The same results are obtained if red spider effects a lodgment on the foliage, and in order to prevent this a liberal use of the syringe is necessary.

Novelties In Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bradt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Reminders.

With the general grower and retailer there will be little room or time to do much but prepare your stock for the holiday sales and there is nothing so important as being prepared, with your business down to a system. I very distinctly remember years ago a young man in our business whose cash sales would average $2.30 a day and his charges about $3.75. He had one bench, or counter, in the shed, which was used for wrapping plants. In one corner were the books of the firm and scattered about was a ball or two of string, wrapping paper, etc. Before suspension of business for the day and after this tremendous rush a young man (the only help) was kept busy twenty minutes putting things in their places, cleaning up, you may say.

I know and freely admit that there are times and hours in a rush when some disorder is inevitable, but in the great majority of cases it is not pressure of business that's the cause; it is the absence of the bump of order. Midshipman Easy's father had a phrenological machine for depressing vicious bumps and developing the useful and virtuous. But, in the absence of the machine, remember your failing and try and be orderly and systematic. There is a place for everything, and it should be there. Nothing raises an irritation of the epidermis in me quicker or more violent than to see plants, either on the bench or on the path, that are past their usefulness and never can yield a cent. And in the sheds there is often great disorder and needed room taken up with useless truck and muck. Remember that the smaller the place the greater the need of order and system and economy of space. If you have acres around you there is plenty of room "out of doors" for things the elements won't hurt, but city places have not that accommodation. Here are a few reminders of some things that can be seen to ahead of time:

All sorts, sizes and shapes of boxes for cut flowers should be made up and ready for use. You will find some clean dry place for them. To keep a woman, or man, either, waiting while Charlie runs back to make up a box to hold a dozen roses impresses the customer that you are slightly "one horse." All ribbons, mats, paper, etc., you are supposed to have in "elegant shape."

The Care of Cut Flowers.

It pays on this occasion to have a good smart lad who is familiar with the business to take care of the cut flowers and do nothing else. Harry dives into a vase of fifty roses or carnations to select a dozen and leaves three or four hanging over the edge out of water. But it's not in that trifle so much as in the cellar that a manager of your stock of cut flowers is necessary. I am sorry for the man who has not a cool, moist cellar. I quite understand that I say "moist!" For roses it is most certain that the atmosphere should be slightly moist, and I have never seen it do anything but good to carnations, or any other flower. I mean such moisture as would be produced by a wet or damp floor.

The ice box is the great attraction of a store. Magnificent are some of the creations in this line, and fascinating to the observer, but a poor place to keep flowers if you expect them to be satisfactory to your customer. I am not going to enlarge on store management, it's not my forte, but I will just remind you that if you want to use cut poinsettias in any decoration you must cut them twenty-four hours ahead of time and when fresh cut put the stems in a jar in almost (not serve a good lot of carnations without undue "embalming."

Dressing the Plants.

Now to the greenhouse. Those having only a retail store should have every plant in it dressed for the occasion, but if you have a conservatory in the rear, or a greenhouse at your back, there is no need of every plant being decked with mat and ribbon. Enough of everything you have should be on display in its best frills and tucks and others can be fixed up as needed. There is no possible excuse why the pots of every plant you are likely to sell at this season should not be scrubbed and clean. If you wash a few that don't sell, there are no regrets.

At least ninety per cent of all the plants sold at Christmas time are entrusted to Santa Claus. They are remembrances to friends and loved ones, and the prettier and more dainty they can be made, the more they please. So don't think you can keep up with the procession unless you trim up and embellish your plants with the best of taste and mate-quite) boiling water and keep them in the store or greenhouse, not the cool cellar or ice box, or they will droop their heads like the 9,999 rejected ones at Detroit.

Don't put violets into the ice box or very cool cellar, either. Expose a few for sale, but keep the stock in a close box in bottles of water in the temperature of the greenhouse. Valley, narcissi and Romans should be cut at least twenty-four hours before sending out and they are flowers that an ice box can't spoil. Read Mr. Baur's notes on how to re-rial. You can many times, most times, in fact, get more money for the plant well trimmed and a good profit on your ribbon and mat. We have seen photographs of plants of various kinds trimmed up in New York. The ribbon in some cases seemed overdone; it looked as if the plant was there to support and show off the ribbon. Yet when not overdone, some ribbon tastefully arranged will catch the eye and help to sell the plant or basket of plants.

I am not artist enough to tell you what shade of ribbon will adorn all our seasonable plants. There are shades of ribbon made now to blend or harmonize with all our flowers. Green blends with all, for it is nature's primal color. The brilliant scarlet poinsettia has a ribbon to match its brilliancy, or almost so. There are shades, alike, for the begonia, the light pink and dark pink azaleas, the orange trees, the red-berried plants and, in fact, all of them. The Porto Rican mat is the prettiest pot covering up to date, and invaluable, and you can always get twice its value in the price of the plant. To those (if there are such) who think that this embellishment is unnatural, artificial and uncalled for, remember the plant in a pot is unnatural to begin with and perhaps seventy-five per cent of all the trade, traffic and business of the civilized (so-called) world is in commodities that are dispensable and can be called more or less luxuries. It would take a greater philosopher than the greatest of the age, Herbert Spencer, just passed away, to say where the necessary end and the luxurious begin. It is merely a matter of degree and depends entirely on what manner of life you are assuming. A new pair of pants would be a great luxury to "the king of the Cannibal Islands." With us they are simply a necessity, so if Mrs. Newrich or dear Mrs. Oldrich is willing to pay for $2 worth of frills on a three-dollar plant, by all means encourage a distribution of her wealth. But just let me say that it's not the divine woman that is the best customer; at this season it's the sterner sex that opens his wallet on these occasions.

System a Necessity.

I have on more than one occasion tried to explain what I consider necessary to if cards are to be attached then mention on the slip so it would read:

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 22, 1903.
Charge Mr. Vernon Green 373 The Strand
1 Azalea sent to Mr. J. P. Morgan..
.....$75.00

Salesman, Tommy Atkins.

Delivery.

The boss, or somebody as good, should have the handling of all these orders, and the evening or night (for there is little time during daylight) before the day they are to be delivered, with a space given over to tomorrow's deliveries, where they can be stood and if possible arranged in lots for delivery, north, south, east and west, you are ready to look over the orders. Just let me say here that what we call "routing" the deliveries is a very important matter. Many a time we have seen a wagon drive home with a plant or two alone in the wagon. "What's the matter with that plant?" "Why, that delivery is away out near the pest house, two miles out of our road; we thought Jack and Fred could take that when they went on the east side." Most likely the plant has had such a ride that it has to be replaced. A good router is a valuable man on these occasions. The boss at the desk, with his glasses on and cap to keep the flies from his bald head, begins: "Harry, here is your order; an azalea and begonia; there are the address and cards." "Tommy Atkins, here is your order," and so on and you will soon get through it without confusion. It will keep the boss busy writing the address tags, but he likes to work, and if things go nicely, work is the greatest and least regrettable of pleasures. It often oc-

Udston House, Hamilton, Scotland. The group of which this is one had been flowering for about three months when photographed, so that Mr. Chisholm must have brought them along slowly under very cool treatment, with plenty of ventilation. The photograph shows the plant very much reduced in size; but in reality each was twenty to twenty-four inches in diameter, although grown only in 6-inch pots. Mr. Chisholm describes his success as due chiefly to the attention he gave the calceolarias at the final potting. He finds that turf, clean leaf mold and sand make the best compost. Such a thing as old spent mushroom dung is only of service when the leaf mold is an impossibility, and should for other reasons be avoided. Good, clean, solid compost, and the plants not potted too loosely, should grow this showy and popular class of plants. The strain of seeds was that of David W. Thomson, of Edinburgh. For conservatory or greenhouse decoration in spring few plants are more showy than calceolarias. The second illustration shows a house of chrysanthemums grown by Mr. Chisholm.

AGAPANTHUS INSIGNIS.

At a recent London exhibition Wm. Bull & Sons, of Chelsea, showed what appears to be a new and distinct species of agapanthus. The common African lily has for so long been regarded as the one and only species that the newcomer has created not a little surprise, and many have considered that it must necessarily be a form of A. umbellatus. Whether the botanists decide that A. insignis is a distinct species or not, the plant is certainly distinct from a horticultural point of view. The chief distinctive features of A. insignis are the milk-white color of the basal portion of the green, arching, strap-shaped leaves, this whitish color extending some distance along the midrib; the unusually large and many flowered heads of bloom; and the very long pedicels. It will thus be seen that the inflorescence is more spherical than in A. umbellatus, and this is due chiefly to the extraordinary number of flowers produced, and to the elongated pedicels, which permit the outer flowers to droop around the scape as fast as the central flowers expand and need more room. The flowers are quite like those of the well-known species as regards shape, but their color is light lilac, faintly tinted and shaded with lavender. A. insignis was imported from South Africa by Messrs. Bull & Sons, and will probably be distributed by them at an early date. It promises to be as amenable to cultivation as A. umbellatus. The accompanying illustration will convey a good idea of the flower-head of this new plant.

THE ASMUS WINDOW BOX.

The accompanying illustration shows a window box invented by E. Asmus, of E. Asmus & Co., Chicago, on which a patent has been applied for. It is designed for either indoor or outdoor use, there having previously been nothing which fully met the requirements of the trying conditions of a dwelling room. The ordinary box is either too dry or too wet, usually first one, then the other. Mr. Asmus met this difficulty by making a movable zinc lining not quite so deep as his box. This is in effect a false bottom and the zinc being perforated, permits the surplus water to pass through to the bottom of the box which is filled with moss.

Specimen Calceolaria, Flowered in a 6-inch Pot.

prevent confusion in a retail establishment. Very few, indeed, are the sales that are made and the article taken by the purchaser. They are either ordered and left to the selection of the florist, or the customer says, "I'll take that one and that azalea," and you get his cards and the address where they are to be sent. Every order, whether paid for or not, or whether selected or left to your selection, should be brought to one central office. The name and address of the purchaser, whether cash or not, should be on the order slip, the plant designated and who it is to go to and their address, and curs that the same person will buy plants and flowers, or rather have a plant and cut flowers delivered to the same house. I believe in keeping them entirely separate, or it will create confusion. Take care of the boxes of flowers at a different time. Then let us pray that it will not be zero, with a strong wind, as it is at this moment.

Caring for Cuttings in Sand.

After your cuttings are in sand the one point to be striven for is to keep them from wilting. If you can keep them in a fresh condition for four weeks you may feel certain of success. Shading, of course, is necessary on all bright days; in fact, the sun should not strike the cuttings full at any time during the first four weeks. A little sun in the morning and a little in the evening, when it is quite weak, will do no harm and in many cases much good. You can root them successfully in a house or bench where the sun does not strike them from the time they are put in until they are taken out.

It is in the spraying that you need to exercise judgment, in that and the watering. We sometimes hear some one say to water the cuttings thoroughly at least once each day. That is a mistake. It would not take you long to get the sand into a soggy condition, which would cause the cuttings to rot. You want the sand constantly wet but only wet enough so that the cuttings can draw what water they need. It should not show dry at the surface. If it becomes soggy the moisture will rise from it and where the cuttings are the least bit close it will adhere to the leaves and cause damping. If it is kept in that state very long the sand is apt to turn sour, too, and your cuttings are doomed. The finer the sand the easier it is to bring about these conditions. The coarser the sand the more water it will take to keep it in the proper state of moisture and the less danger there will be of sour sand.

The spraying is as important as the watering. During cloudy, cool weather, when the atmosphere is naturally bracing, not near so much spraying is necessary as during bright, warm days, when even the growing plants are inclined to wilt. For about a week or ten days after the cuttings are put into the sand a very light spraying will do them good, even in cloudy weather, but it should be little more than a mist. After they are callused they will draw enough moisture from the sand to keep them fresh in cloudy weather and it will be better for the cuttings if the tops are kept dry. Too much spraying will often develop a case of rust on cuttings that would naturally come out clean. There is no better stimulant in cases of emergency to prevent wilting, but as I said before get along with just as little spraying as you can.

A good illustration would be our experience with the variety Mrs. Nelson. This variety made a record for itself as a hard rooter and this fact caused several gray hairs in several heads I know. Last year we grew a lot of it and the first batch of cuttings caused us to fear that we would lose money on it. After the cuttings were in about fifteen days it began to wilt and the more we sprayed it the worse it got, until it began to rust and we had to fire the whole batch out. The second batch we handled differently and with great success. When they began to look wilted we sprayed them but once each morning and then very lightly, but we were very careful to keep them shaded and to keep all draughts away from them. After about ten days of this wilted look they began to straighten up and we took out fully ninety-five per cent of well rooted healthy cuttings. Those who grew old Buttercup will remember what a time we used to have with that variety and when we took out over fifty per cent of rooted cuttings, what a feat it was thought to be. Mrs. Bradt also had just a little streak of this in it, too. You will find more difficulty rooting these varieties along toward spring than you will during this month and the next two.

When you spray it should always be early enough in the day so the tops can dry off again before night. As the cuttings root you can gradually inure them to the light and sun again by letting down the shade later in the morning and raising it earlier in the afternoon. This will help to harden the foliage, which has become rather soft during the four weeks of constant shade. They will not wilt so much after they are taken from the sand and potted. Especially should this be done with cuttings that are shipped.

Minor Details of Propagation.

There are several operations connected with propagation that, while perhaps considered by some as of little importance, nevertheless have a bearing on the ultimate result. Starting with the removal of the cutting from the parent plant, it is not only important that it be taken off without injury to either but that a receptacle be provided to receive the cutting and preserve it from wilting. A flower vase of good depth and medium diameter, previously rinsed with cold water, answers every purpose; it is easily carried about and its depth prevents the circulation of air among the cuttings. It will be readily seen that rinsing with cold water just previous to using, aids in prevention of wilting. Where a very large quantity is being gathered and nimble fingers are preparing them for the sand as fast as gathered, a basket, containing a thin layer of damp sphagnum moss at the bottom may be used to good advantage. In any case make the batches small, rather than large, and as soon as gathered sprinkle heavily with cold water. Should there be delay in trimming, cover the vase or basket with a wet cloth.

Do not try to see how many cuttings you can hold in your hand before depositing in the receptacle, as there is liability of their becoming crushed and, worse than that, the heat of the hand works a positive injury. It is surprising what a difference there is in the hands of different persons. Some can handle flowers with impunity while with others the blooms seem to resent their very touch, and this is equally true with the handling of cuttings. You probably know the marked difference in the ability of different persons to wear flowers a given time.

The same rule will apply to the time of taking cuttings as to the cutting of bloom; that is, early in the day or on cloudy days, when the sun is not playing full on the plants. I made provision above for delay in trimming, but let it be of short duration and as soon as each cutting is trimmed place in a vessel of fresh, cool water in which has been stirred a few drops to the quart of ammoniacal copper carbonate solution.

I wish to lay particular stress on the importance of keeping the cuttings in water during the time between trim-

VAN BOCHOVES' HOUSES.

The accompanying illustrations are from recent photographs taken at the establishment of G. Van Bochove & Bro., Kalamazoo, Mich. The rose house shows benches of Bride, Bridesmaid and Ivory. The right center bench is Ivory, which has done remarkably well with them, both as a winter and a summer bloomer.

The other picture shows the new carnation range, photographed while the plants were in preparation for a first crop and with a view to showing the construction of the houses. They are of the short-roofed pattern, with tubular iron framing and supports set in concrete. Each house is 160 feet long and thirteen feet eight inches wide, containing two walks and two benches, the latter tile bottomed. They are heated by steam and have thus far proved in every way very satisfactory houses.

ROSES.

Propagating American Beauties.

The propagation of American Beauty, to be a success, is in some ways quite different from the methods which best suit teas and their hybrids, and many of the failures attending the propagation of this queen of roses arises from the fact that they are treated in the same manner as Meteor, Brides, etc.

As Mr. Scott has frequently pointed out, a cutting is by no means a new plant, such as we get from seed, but merely a perpetuation of a branch of an old plant, so we ought to exercise great care not to perpetuate, along with this branch, any of the diseases, weakness or undesirable characteristics. Plants which have a uniformly thrifty habit and have proved free bloomers should be selected, avoiding those which are of too rank a growth, as these invariably are shy and late in blooming.

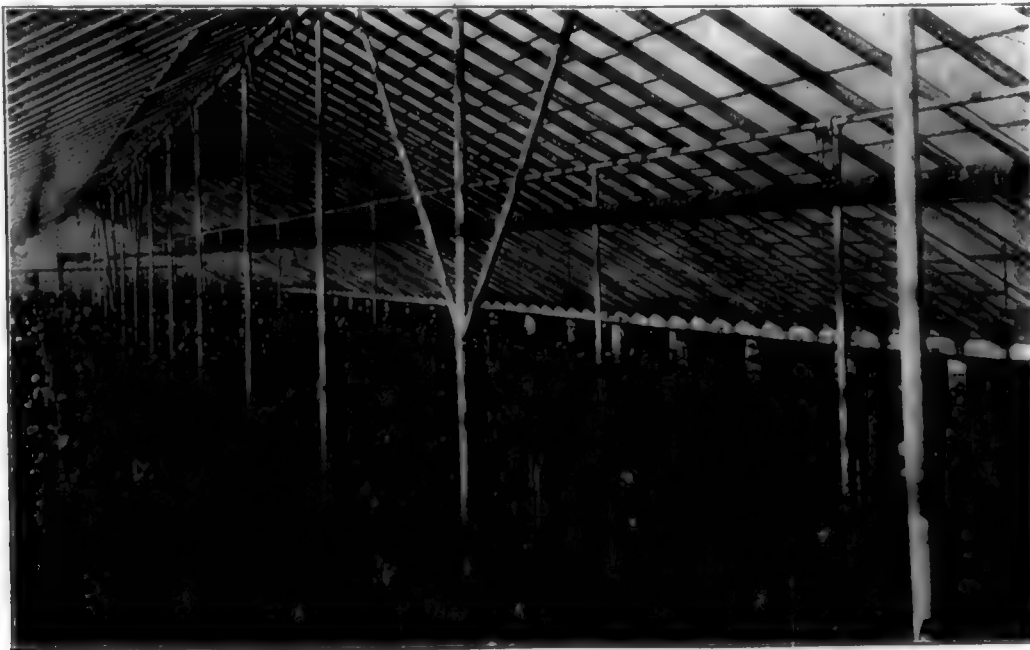

By a careful selection of well ripened, short jointed wood from free blooming plants and persisting in this system from year to year, the habit of the stock will become more uniform and their productiveness, especially in medium length stems, will be increased by twenty-five per cent. This statement is deduced from actual experiment and supported by records.

By confining ourselves to short jointed wood we are enabled to get our cuttings of a like condition of ripeness, which insures a more uniform root formation than if we use long stems for cutting wood, as it is impossible that all the eyes on a six-foot stem can in any way approach each other in this respect, the consequence being that the rooting stage will be very uneven.

A cutting with three or four eyes I have always preferred to a one-eyed cutting, as I find they make a more thrifty plant, although possibly not of such rank growth, and form a bush much quicker when planted in the bench.

The insertion of the cuttings in the sand should immediately follow their making, as they are very liable to wilt if they are much exposed. In order to prevent the cuttings from shedding their leaves, great care will be required not to overcrowd them in the bench, giving them sufficient room for a free circulation of air among the leaves, so that they may dry out quickly. A temperature of 62 degrees in the sand with a house temperature of 55 degrees is about the ideal, but I have seen some fine batches of stock at a much higher temperature; I, however, find the cooler rooted preferable.

There is great danger to Beauty cutting and inserting in sand. It is true the time should not be long, but every second a cutting lays out under full exposure to the air, its vitality is ebbing away. Remember you are not dealing with geraniums or cacti, which are said to better resist damping off, especially the latter, when the cut end is allowed a few days to sear over by exposure to the air.

In trimming use a very sharp knife, insuring a clean cut surface which will callus much more quickly than when the tissues are in any way torn or mangled by the use of dull instruments. Plant tissue is like human flesh; a cut from a sharp tool heals sooner than when tearing takes place. Another advantage in trimming the heel is the increase of surface from which roots will spring, the result being a heavily rooted cutting which takes hold quickly on transfer to soil.

Take care that no bits of leaves cut from the tips of the grass, find their way into the sand. They will decay and cause trouble if allowed to remain. G. S. O.

tings in irregular and indiscriminate watering. During the period that the callus is forming they must be carefully tended, as the least tendency to dryness results in wilting, followed by leaf-shedding when the cutting, even though it does form nice roots, will be practically worthless and had better be dumped. They are also very sensitive at this period to over watering, which has practically the same effect. Just as soon as the roots are formed, even when they are only one quarter of an inch in length, they should be potted, as no rose shows deterioration in the sand so quickly.

During the whole of the time they are in the cutting bench particular pains must be taken in shading. Having such heavy foliage to support it takes very little direct sunshine to dry the life out of the leaves. I frequently see shading done in the old, careless and slipshod method; viz., by a mass of old newspapers spread over and lying on the cuttings. This is a custom which cannot be too earnestly deprecated. Apart from the injury done to the cuttings by the weight of the paper, they do not serve the purpose intended, as it is nearly impossible to keep them from blowing off. They also serve as a condenser of the moisture and conserve the heat among the foliage which will, if anything can, help in denuding the cuttings of their leaves.

A roll of very thin cheesecloth arranged at about fifteen inches above the sand and made so that it can be withdrawn or rolled up immediately the direct rays of the sun have left the bench suits the case admirably. They should have all the light possible, in order to keep the leaves hard and crisp, so that they may be able to make full use of them when the roots are once formed.

Requiring a deal of care and systematic attention, it will certainly pay us to give them of the best, they being of all our roses the most impatient of neglect in their earlier stages and as neglect in the cutting bench is responsible for many of the after troubles which affect this rose, look to its well-being now.

RIBES.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Perhaps not much. Long familiarity with the strange, awkward and fantastic names of men, localities, cities and towns make us forget or cease to notice their crude and unpoetical sound. Most men inherit their family name from their father, and if they are not pleased with it in after years, it costs, in some countries, a good sum to legally adopt another. I remember a most estimable gentleman who inherited the family name of Cat, and it cost him $5,000 in England to assume the name of Belden, or some such name, and shortly afterwards this studious man of leisure was reading a book while in the saddle. The horse was also in a reverie, possibly meditating on some metaphysical subject, or oats, and both went over the brink of a chalk pit and life went out of both. But everyone who has changed his name has not met with that melancholy end. That was on the beautiful south downs of Old England.

Of all the British names of rivers, mountains and lakes, and I think I could say also the towns and cities, those of Scotland undoubtedly are the most pleasant, and Ireland is next. The Welch are, of course, unpronounceable, unless you speak the language, and the English are cold and harsh. There is nothing musical in Thames, or Humber, or Cam. Glengarry, Loch Lomond, Kentyre and Blair Athol have a warmth and richness, and even Tipperary and Kilkenny associates you with such a rich, mossy brogue that you feel slightly elated. Unfortunately too many of our American and Canadian towns and cities are named after old English towns, or the man who first arrived. If a Mr. Potts emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1742 he built a house and called it Pottsville. Toronto was called Little York up to seventy years ago; then some people of good taste had it changed to the beautiful name it now bears. Mr. Jones founded Jonesville, and Mr. Tubbs, Tubbsville. And what sounds very absurd at first hearing is the little country villages inhabited by people who never heard of the classical cities for which their four corners are named. Athens, Darien, Antioch, etc. Of all the names, not only appropriate but pleasant and poetical, for cities and states, the Indian names must be acknowledged by all to have the preference. And many of them, thank goodness, have been most wisely adopted.

Perhaps names are largely accidental, after all, so I had better get to the point. We can name a new flower or a new baby what we like, and it's a pity that after ten thousand names had been suggested for John Breitmeyer & Sons' beautiful new rose that no prettier name could have been selected than La Detroit. We have already heard disappointment expressed in several quarters. It is neither descriptive nor pretty. If an association of the locality from which it was sent out was desired, why not have christened it Cadillac or St. Clair? A young florist unacquainted with continental European languages asked the writer what the "La" meant. I told him, of course, it was because the rose was a "la la." What a pity a name could not be found as beautiful as Sunset or Meteor or even Bride or Bridesmaid! There is nothing musical or euphonious about the name Detroit, beautiful as the City of the Straits is in itself.

If we are going to name new varieties of our florists' flowers after the cities where they originate, I can think of several pleasant results. There is a man in the state of New York has a cross between an American Beauty and an Austrian Briar; it's a sort of a chestnut shade, and I shall suggest that he name it after his town, which is Horseheads.

Then there is a promising seedling carnation in Hornellsville, N. Y.; that's a pretty name. If you get a rose that is inclined to sport too much you might call it Sing Sing. And why stick to your native town? The next dark carnation that beats The President, Mr. Ward might name Timbuctoo, and the writer has a sort of ochre yellow which we are going to call Constantinople. Mrs. Jones, or Our Mary Ann, or Lafayette McMullen will do very well for gladioli and dahlias that come and go quickly, but a rose that is likely to be grown by everyone and constantly on the lips of every florist and flower lover should have a prettier name than La Detroit.

But I am glad it was an angelic woman who got the prize. They have, among other divine gifts, the majority of all the inspiration that is sent into the world. But my inspiration would have suggested simply Our Phil.

COMANCHE.

A PROGRESSIVE RETAILER.

Chicago has a reputation to sustain in the matter of hustling and the florists, growers, wholesalers and retailers, are doing their share to maintain the city's credit undiminished in this respect. Among the most progressive of the store men few are more active than August Lange. Everything is grist which comes to his mill and his two stores on Monroe street, opposite the Palmer House, handle immense quantities of both cut flowers and pot plants. He was one of the first to see the advertising value of large window displays and in many other ways he has reached out for new trade until he has built up a very good business.

Mr. Lange is 35 years old, a native of Berlin. He has been in the retail flower business since he was 13, having begun as a boy in the store of James Farrell in Chicago in 1881. For a time he was a partner in the firm of Harmes & Lange. First he was located at 189 N. Clark and in the World's Fair year at 111 State street. In 1897 he opened for himself at his present location on Monroe street. Doing a profitable trade the first year there, last year his business was three times that of the first season. Last April Mr. Lange opened the Floralia, only a couple of doors from his other store. Miss Ida Lange is now in charge there and both places are doing well. Mr. Lange has attended many conventions of the S. A. F., but he will always look back upon the Omaha meeting as the best of all, for there he made the acquaintance of the lady who is now Mrs. Lange. She is a sister of Mrs. Swoboda, wife of the junior partner in the Omaha firm of Hess & Swoboda.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Two Crops From One House.

We have a house, 20x100, and think of putting in mums next year. This house has solid beds and we thought of planting some early varieties and having enough late sorts planted in boxes outside, so that when the early ones are cut we can bring in the late ones and set them in the bed. Our idea is to get two crops of mums from one house. Could it be done? A. B. C.

I would say that it can be done, but whether it would pay is another question. By growing kinds like Fitzwygram, Marquis de Montmort, etc., and taking the early bud the flowers can be cut away before October 1 and the later varieties planted out in boxes could be rushed in to fill the space. There are several objections to the plan. One is that the early flowers would come in so early that they would be competing with asters and dahlias in the market. The earliest flowers of late years have brought only a poor price. The grower knows what his market wants and what he could get, so he is the best judge of that particular point.

Another objection is that growing plants outside in pots or boxes is a very unsatisfactory method. Every insect that comes along takes a shy at them and they get alternately washed out and burned up in this delightful climate of ours, so that when housing time comes they are about ready for the rubbish heap. A. B. C. will also run his chances on getting caught by an early frost, which is generally due in his section about September 20.

Rather than grow the late stock in pots or boxes outside, if I were going to try it, I think I would plant my stock in the open ground and pinch it until July 1. This would give plants which would be dwarf enough to lift without much inconvenience to them at that time, if the house be well shaded for a few days after planting, and the late stopping or pinching would throw the buds late, so that they would be very small at the time the plants were lifted. My candid advice to A. B. C. would be not to bother with it. Get one good crop of mums and then fill in with Easter lilies or something of that description and I think the balance at the end of the year will be larger. BRIAN BORU.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM IN 1903.

The following are the remarks of Arthur Herrington, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, before the Farmers' Club and Horticultural Section of the American Institute at New York, December 9:

Exhibitions.

Reviewing the season that has just closed, the fact is self-evident that the chrysanthemum still holds undisputed sway as the queen of autumn, and should anyone look with disfavor upon the supremacy the flower holds in its brief season? Roses, carnations and even the aristocratic orchids are with us throughout the year, and the fragrant violet is obtainable a large portion of the year, but there comes a time when all of these flowers are subordinated to the chrysanthemum.

The enthusiasm for the flower shows no abatement and there is no necessity to advance reasons for its general popularity. The present year has probably seen more floral exhibitions held in chrysanthemum time than ever before, and would seem to justify the claim that the chrysanthemum is the prime factor therein. Nor does this apply to our country alone, as European papers, especially those from England, bring reports of numerous exhibitions and in small country towns as well as the large centers of population.

Without any available figures to substantiate the assertion, it may be stated with little fear of contradiction that the exhibitions held in chrysanthemum time greatly exceed in number the aggregate of the balance of the year, and while their primary object is to display the chrysanthemum in all its variety and perfection of beauty, we are accomplishing something more. In proportion to their patronage by the general public they must surely be an effective influence in promoting the growth of floriculture, the love of flowers with resultant benefits accompanying to those engaged in the profession. Have we not in the past taken a too narrow-minded view of the results of our exhibitions in appraising their success solely on the basis of gate receipts? We may be pardoned for expressing mutual congratulations upon the recent successful exhibition held in New York, and especially in point of attendance. It is idle to suppose the influence and effect of that grand exhibition ceased with the closing of its doors. It must have aroused a spirit of emulation in some who saw it, a desire to grow, themselves, such flowers as were there displayed.

Close observation of the attendant crowds forcibly demonstrated another fact. It has become a fad of a few, of late, to decry the big blooms as coarse and unlovely; in fact, ugly, some will say. This is not the verdict of the general public. It refuses to put its seal of approval upon artistic disquisitions that claim the maximum of beauty is found in diminished size. While in the chrysanthemum there is variety of form and of size, too, to gratify all tastes, the big blooms will appeal to and win the admiration of the vast majority and the show that has thousands of them will be a popular show if the fact is publicly known.

Within the last two years our exhibitions appeared to be more or less dominated by a few varieties and rearrangement of schedules was considered to correct this fault. It has been corrected in a much more satisfactory manner. It was hard to avoid the dominance of Appleton and Eaton when they were giants in a class almost alone. What has the present season shown? Many more giants forthcoming, of variable form and hue. We had a slight foretaste last year in the appearance of some Australian novelties. A new source of supply had been tapped, which raised our expectations to the highest pitch.

The realization has been rich indeed and the salient feature of this year's exhibitions, wherever they displayed the newest varieties, has been the all-round superiority, the surpassing excellence of the Australians, supplemented by quite a few sterling acquisitions from English and French raisers.

American contributions to the chrysanthemum in 1903 appear to have been out-classed, but mention should be made of Yellow Eaton, which, although but a sport, has proved even better than its parent.

Some noteworthy varieties of 1902 the merit of which have been proven, are Mrs. Thirkell, Lord Salisbury, C. J. Salter, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Durbin's Pride, F. S. Vallis, Lady Roberts and W. R. Church.

The year 1903 marks an epoch in chrysanthemum improvement and especially in the strengthening of color classes heretofore very weak, in the pinks and crimsons. Among the new sorts the following valuable ones may be briefly enumerated:

Pink varieties: W. Duckham, F. A. Cobbold, Leila Filkins, Lady Hopetoun, Daisy Moore, Lucy Evans, Parkside Gem and Marie Liger.

Crimson varieties: Maynell, S. T. Wright, Henry Barnes, Mrs. F. W. Vallis, Lord Hopetoun and Otaheite.

White and yellow varieties: Ben Wells, Cheltoni, Percy Plumridge, Hero of Mafeking, Mrs. Harry Emmerton, Col. Powell, La Fusion, Mme. M. Cahuzac, Mme. E. Niccoulard, Mme. Diedereichs and Mlle. M. Douillet.

"Any other color": Harrison Dick, Mary Inglis, Gen. Hutton, Miss Mildred Ware and Donald McLeod.

Cultural Experiences.

The chrysanthemum has shown facility of adaptability to the cultural conditions necessitated by the climate of our eastern and middle states and we have made it a greenhouse plant entirely. European growers are able to have their plants in the open air for several months, but the man who attempts to follow this practice beneath North American skies is foredoomed to failure.

But even with the plants beneath the glass all the time eternal vigilance must prevail, and varying conditions must be observed and counteracted if unfavorable in tendency. No two seasons are exactly alike and the lines of treatment that have brought marked success in one may have to be materially modified in order to achieve the same success the following year. The past season has been of a peculiarly trying nature. The summer months were excessively wet, but favorable to the growth of the plants. A continuance of this weather far into the autumn led to an adverse condition of things, as when the buds were taken the plants lacked that essential stability brought about by a proper ripening of the wood, as we know it, and hence were badly handicapped from the start for the future development and perfection of the flower.

October, unusually warm, further aggravated the evil by hastening the advancement of the blooms and a continuance of warm, humid nights caused considerable damping of the blooms, in the collections of some growers to a most disastrous extent.

The thought naturally arises, how can this be prevented. Again, why does a certain variety suffer and another growing beside it prove immune. One example may be cited. A batch of Jeannie Falconer is ruined in a day and next it a batch of Miss Alice Byron remains perfect. Of course it is easy to say that certain varieties are soft, but after all we have seen this year of effect, cannot some research be made to throw more light on the cause.

Observation has taught us to note generalities that are predisposing causes, but it would seem possible to pursue investigations deeper, to the extent of even making a microscopical examination and analysis of the tissues of plant and flower. If some of our experiment stations would take up this matter, ably equipped as they are, more light might be thrown upon the cause of this perplexing trouble.

Meanwhile the grower does the best he can to maintain a dry, buoyant atmosphere in the house and a slight shade has also proved very beneficial in arresting the evil. Those who do not grow exhibition flowers tell us they have none of these troubles, but this is poor consolation. Granted that damping of the blooms is an attendant evil to intensive cultivation, the problem is how to rectify the evil. We have seen too much of the effect; we need now to know more of

ED. REVIEW: I note an inquiry from W. T. R. in regard to a broken gasket, page 136. I was recently in the store of Joseph Kift & Son and Mr. Kift showed me a leak in his sectional boiler and asked me the best thing to do with it. A stream nearly as thick as a small lead pencil was running into the fire box. I at once said that he would have to get a new section put in the boiler. Mr. Kift said it had leaked once before and he had put bran in the boiler and it had stopped it and he would try it again. I saw him a few days afterwards and inquired how the boiler was doing and he told me it was all right. I thought it was the cheapest way of getting a "bran" new boiler that I had heard of. It is worth trying.

ERICAS.

Although ericas are of inestimable value to the commercial florist, both as pot specimens and as cut sprays, their culture in this country has been somewhat neglected, probably because many of the hard-wooded kinds are of slow growth, requiring a great amount of patient care, study and skill to develop good specimens, and because they are very impatient of the least neglect. There is, however, one class of ericas which can be grown by any ordinary florist who cares to exercise a little patience and study and which for made up work fill a want which these only can.

The softer wooded kinds, such as E. hyemalis, Wilmoreana, colorans, gracilis and the ventricosas, are of comparatively easy culture. These can be had in great diversity of color and form of flower, and by a careful selection of the different kinds and varieties a succession of bloom can be had from early fall till late spring. In the European markets this class of plants forms one of the most numerous, attractive and profitable during these months and no doubt they will, in time, make their mark in the markets here.

I will endeavor to describe the methods employed in the successful culture of these softer wooded and quicker growing heaths in this country, which is somewhat different from the European methods by reason of climatic and soil differences. Most of them are (or are the offspring of) natives of the Cape of Good Hope and consequently require cool greenhouse treatment, being at all times very impatient of fire heat. A night temperature of from 40 to 45 degrees, with full and free ventilation and an atmosphere as free from moisture as possible, is what is wanted.

These plants require the greatest care in watering. They must never be allowed to become dry, nor yet run the least danger by over watering, as both are equally fatal. Great care must always be taken to keep the foliage dry, as they are very susceptible to a disease very much resembling mildew, which is also very contagious and is induced by too much moisture in the air or by having the foliage in a state of dampness. The remedy for this trouble is to dust the foliage with flowers of sulphur, taking care not to allow any of it to reach the soil, as it has a very debilitating effect on this class of plants.

The most suitable soil is a fibrous peat, with about one-fourth of clean sharp sand. A few broken pot-sherds mixed with the compost serves to keep it porous and sweet. This must be rammed very firmly around the ball, so that the water may percolate slowly and evenly. Care must be taken when potting not to get the plant either too deep or too shallow. If too deep in the least degree the plant will rot off at the neck and if too shallow the sun will destroy the roots. Ample and perfect drainage must be provided.

During the summer they should be placed out of doors in a dry and airy situation, where they can have the benefit of full sunshine. The plants should be placed on inverted flower pots or bricks and sufficient moss put into the frame to entirely cover the pots, so that the very fine roots may be protected from the hot sunshine. It is safer to have the frames so arranged that the sash can be used during a very wet spell.

These plants should be pruned annually. As soon as the flowering season is over the stronger stems should be cut back to within an inch of the older wood and the weaker side growths should also be cut back, but not so much.

The greatest drawback to the successful culture of heaths in this country is improper soil, our peat being so deficient in fiber. Many growers make use of imported peat, with a small admixture of light, fibrous loam. Others use the native article with a mixture of cocoa fiber, and with success. Where the mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia, flourishes, good soil for this purpose can always be had, as they really do as well in this as in the imported peat. Where there is any suspicion of lime in the water it is safer to use rain water, as lime is fatal to the erica.

RIBES.

STEM ROT.

The following are the remarks of James W. Dunford before the St. Louis Florists' Club on December 10:

There is no disease known to the carnation grower that causes more heart aches, more discussion and more empty places in bench and field, than stem-rot. Nor is there any insect that preys on the divine flower that we dread like this most modern disease, stem-rot. A few years ago it was practically unknown. In the good old times when any time before frost was early enough to plant from the field, and long-stemmed flowers early in the season were scarce, we did not know what troubles were in store for us.

Who knows an effective remedy for this disease? Did you ever hear of one? I had hoped to give you something new on this subject but am not able to. My personal views and deductions are given below. None of them are guaranteed and I reserve the right to change any of them at any time. Stem-rot is inherited. This I think is positive. Never propagate from diseased plants or unhealthy looking ones. Never buy rooted cuttings from anyone who sells at starvation prices, for you may be sure that care was not taken in the selection of his cuttings. Don't plant cuttings in soil, or pot them, unless they have plenty of roots; give them a good start. Keep young stock cool and don't plant in rich soil. I believe that any sudden check in the growth of any carnation plant, unless counterbalanced by the proper treatment is most conducive to stem-rot.

Any soil heavily enriched with stable manure and planted with the healthiest stock will develop the disease. This is certain; any part of a bench that gets much drip from leaks in the gutters, or any part that through carelessness got too much fertilizer, will prove a bonanza for stem-rot. Summer blooming carnations that are mulched for economy's sake, will in a wet season go like lambs to the slaughter. Carnations planted too deeply also succumb. One of the worst things to do is to give too much water when plants are put in the houses. Sterilizing the soil by baking, in houses, or the steaming process, will certainly kill all germs in the soil, but will not prevent the disease. There is no effective remedy known for stem-rot.

If a variety persists in giving way to the trouble after you have done your best, throw it out. Remove all plants from the field as soon as affected. Don't plant too deeply. Don't be too liberal with your fertilizer; be satisfied to make up for the deficiencies later in the season when the plants are growing nicely.

Lime is good for more reasons than one, and is said to kill a few of the germs; try it by mixing some in the benches before you plant. Water lightly until the plants are well established and don't plant in any place where there will be a drip every time it rains. I have found that in a variety like Crane, which seems to take the disease more than any other kind, that cuttings rooted in February and March, planted in the field from 2-inch pots were much more satisfactory than older and bigger plants.

We must improve our methods. The time is past when anything and any way will do. Did you ever try plants that were put in the field from 2-inch or 2½-inch, cool grown and not pot bound. Just try them. These are the ones that hold the dirt when transplanted to benches. This early planting seems to make it imperative that we make more and more of an effort to guard against all checks to growth at any stage, for it comes at just the time when nature says, "You would better leave well enough alone for a month or two." I intend to plant almost entirely from 2-inch pots to the field.

It seems to me the time is not far distant when we shall plant our carnations largely from 3 and 3½-inch pots, the first week in June, just as roses are planted. Why not? I tried some one year planted June 1 from 2-inch pots and they grew like weeds and made fine stems and had no stem-rot. You will note that I have not burdened you with the Latin name of this disease. It is not necessary; just plain stem-rot is good or bad enough. Our only hope is that some genius will find a remedy or that we can build the carnation up constitutionally, so that it will be able to say boo to stem-rot without danger of infection.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Local trade has been very dull this week, possibly largely due to the very severe cold weather which arrived on Sunday and which has made the growers a great deal of trouble, for many were unprepared for from 10 to 17 degrees below zero. It has made the consumption of coal very great and even some of the big growers had no more than a couple of days' supply on hand. Shipping trade is not as active as it has been in recent weeks, but receipts are light and good stock is going out fairly well.

There are still large supplies of Beauties, and tea roses are plentiful. Good Brides and Maids sell out clean each day and very good prices are realized for some of the extra select stock, but there are quantities of the lower grade material which are hard to move at any price. Chatenay is in good supply and of excellent quality. Sunrise and Carnot are also seen in first-class shape, but in not very large supplies. Liberty is first-class with one or two growers, but in general not very long in stem.

Carnations continue as in the past two or three weeks, with prices holding up well. Every now and then, however, a wholesaler hangs on to a couple of hundred good flowers rather than make a small concession in price and carries them over until the next day, with the result that they lose half their value. The trade seems to prefer the medium qualities, and it is unsafe to hold high grade stock, and the low grade material is hard to sell at $1 a hundred. Violets are plentiful, again, with prices going no higher than $1.50 per hundred. There is good demand for Harrisii lilies and valley is selling very well. Green goods of all descriptions are plentiful.

Christmas Prospects.

The near approach of the holidays does not see any great unanimity of opinion as to supplies or prices. There are those who believe that receipts will be very light and others have conceived the idea that stock will be plentiful. Orders are not coming in very rapidly, but there is every other indication of good business before the arrival of Christmas. It is to be hoped that the growers will not pickle their stock, because the market at present is declining to take anything that bears the marks of age. Any carnation grower who holds back stock on such a market as this is defeating his own object and with plenty of roses in the market it will be folly to accumulate any quantities of Brides and Maids, for the quality is sure to be apparent.

The Monthly Exhibition.

The third of the Chicago Florists' Club's monthly trade exhibitions was held in the Atlas block yesterday afternoon. Christmas plants were shown, also roses and carnations, the exhibition being on the whole very creditable, for holiday plants have never been largely grown for this market.

The greatest variety of stock was shown by J. F. Kidwell & Bro., who had Piersoni and Boston ferns, Asparagus plumosus, crotons, azaleas, dracaenas, camellias, primroses, tulips and poinsettias, all in good shape. J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, sent three fine Lorraine begonias. Kalous Bros., who are the champion cyclamen growers in this neighborhood, showed some splendid plants. Kuehne & Pearson had rubbers. W. L. Palinsky showed azaleas and asparagus. The Garfield Park Floral Co. (Oechslin Bros.), brought some of the best poinsettias ever seen here, dwarf, stocky, big headed plants in pans. They also had good azaleas, mignonette and cyclamens. The George Wittbold Co. exhibited palms, pandanus, asparagus and made up baskets of plants. Vaughan's had a nice lot of plants, including some very fine imported hollies, both green and variegated. Leopold Koropp showed two made-up baskets of plants.

In cut flowers, the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, showed a vase of wonderful Golden Gate roses, also an equally good vase of Fiancee carnation, which gets better every time it is shown here. They also had Lawson, Harlowarden and Crusader in good shape. Nathan Smith & Son sent a half dozen blooms of John Burton chrysanthemum, light pink and very good for so late in the season. Peter Reinberg showed his new rose, Uncle John. L. E. Marquisee, of Syracuse, sent a vase of Flamingo carnation, but it had not traveled well. F. F. Bentley was the manager of the show. A club meeting was held in the evening.

Various Notes.

Flint Kennicott has been on the sick list for two weeks and is just getting around again.

J. A. Budlong has bought glass for two new greenhouses, 30x300, for carnations. This will leave him just room for two more such houses, and he may conclude to fill up his lot this season.

Sinner Bros. have sold their entire stock of the folding Christmas bells without doing more than partially supplying the demand. The other supply dealers are also reporting good sale for Christmas bells.

The bowlers met at Mussey's alleys Tuesday evening for the last practice match until the regular handicap tournament is started early in the new year.

W. A. Peterson, the nurseryman, was proposed for membership in the Florists' Club last night.

H. Kruchten is one of the few growers who are fortunate in having a good crop of carnations on for Christmas.

D. C. Noble, of Columbia City, Ind., is sending in some of the finest Lawson carnations which reach this market.

E. E. Pieser reports that he has never seen so many frozen shipments from the growers as have been caught this week. P. M. Broadbeck, who is one of the most careful shippers, lost his entire consignment coming in from Evanston Sunday morning.

Bouquet green is worth about $8.50 in this market this week. At this price it hardly pays to make it into wreathing at $3.50 to $4 per 100 yards. Holly is plentiful and all the supply houses are busy making up wreaths.

S. Garland, Jr., at Des Plaines, has one of the few fine lots of Adonis carnation in this vicinity. He bought 500 plants and lost about 150 in the field; the rest are in fine health.

Thos. H. Best, who was with S. Muir, has gone to Akron, O., to enter into partnership with E. J. Bolanz.

Peter Reinberg says he will plant from 20,000 to 30,000 of his new rose, Uncle John, next year. He has another novelty on his place of which he thinks highly. It is Perle Von Godesberg, which was sent out in 1902 and is catalogued by Peter Lambert as a yellow sport of Kaiserin.

Walter Kreitling had the decorations at the Chicago Club last Friday for the dinner to the principal representatives of the three leading wholesale dry goods houses of the city. He put $300 in stock on the table, mostly Beauties. Mr. Kreitling also has the annual New Year's decoration at the Chicago Club.

Geo. Wittbold Co. had one of the largest decorations of the year at the Auditorium on Tuesday evening, for the bal poudre for the benefit of St. Luke's Hospital.

Myer Heller, of New Castle, was a visitor this week.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business continues excellent, with prices advancing, especially on carnations. The figures obtained for anything worth having of the divine flower are so high as to deter many customers from buying. The growers who do not take advantage of this opportunity and ship their stock as fast as it is ready, will make a serious blunder, as it is improbable that prices, even at Christmas, will average much higher, while any stale stock will bring almost nothing. White and red carnations are bringing better prices than pink of the same grade. Mrs. Lawson, so largely planted by many growers, should prove very profitable at market rates. Prosperity is very late this season, few being seen. The shortage of carnations has increased the demand for other flowers, which are selling unusually well.

Roses, especially Beauties and Liberties, are eagerly sought. The cold weather is helping to make stock of very fine quality, especially roses. As Christmas approaches the bright colors are more appreciated than the paler shades. There will be plenty of poinsettias to meet the demand. Orchids will be very scarce for Christmas, but the general feeling appears to be that we shall experience a heavy holiday business, with enough stock to meet the demand. Valley is in good demand; violets rather scarce.

Philadelphia Flower Market.

The REVIEW takes pleasure in presenting its readers this week with a reproduction of a photograph taken at the Philadelphia Flower Market. The view shows a section of the stalls, some choice stock and some of those who have made the place. Charles E. Meehan, who has made such a splendid record as manager, is standing at the right in the picture. By him is the lady, evidently a lover of carnations, who presides over the books. Her associate in this department was unfortunately detained by a customer who wanted his bill. These customers are unknown outside the Quaker City. Above these two on the right of the line on the stalls is William Stevens, who so ably represents John Burton, president of the S. A. F. Next to him is the junior partner of the Beauty growing firm of Myers & Samtman. Just think, these two quiet looking men control most of the fine Beauties brought into the Market. The next man is Geo. F. Krueger, of Narberth, brother of the dealer in the Reading Terminal. The second man beyond the column is a violet grower named Bloomer, an inspiration to his stock. Then comes George Waterfield, of Wyndmoor; then Frank Hastings, of F. and H. Mergenthaler; next to him is the famous Doylestown grower, R. G. Palmer. This trio is all important in the tea rose market. Next comes Edgar Upton, who represents another Beauty place, J. W. Young's, a vase of Liberty near him. Carefully guarding a pot marked R. G. P., is Robert Gaul, of the Market's pony battery. Below him, with the lilies, is his associate, Max Janow. Next but one to the end is Lovett, of Wieland's, at Newtown, a well known place. Richard Umphried, the cheery assistant manager, is filling a carnation order just around the corner. In the background can be seen the stands of Whetstone & Co., and the Henry F. Michell Co.

Various Notes.

H. H. Battles has quantities of fine poinsettias in one of his houses at Thorn Hedge, at Newtown Square. F. S. Jackson has managed this stock cleverly.

Hugh Graham has a handsome Christmas window, a large specimen Pandanus Sanderi, which lights up beautifully, and a bunch of poinsettias tied with holly red ribbon.

Ernest Heming addressed the Germantown Horticultural Society at the monthly meeting on Monday evening.

Representatives of some of the leading out of town firms are in the city this week doing their Christmas shopping.

The yellow primrose has made a hit. Plants in 4-inch pots that wholesale at 35 cents each, have retailed at $1, prettily dressed in crepe paper to harmonize.

The business being done in holly, mistletoe and other greens is enormous.

Arthur Mallon, Jr., who has made such a success of Louis Burk's place at Olney, has accepted an offer to take charge of George McFaddon's place at Rosemont.

A. Farenwald is sending in a magnificent lot of special Liberties to Leo Niesen.

C. A. Dunn & Co. have made their annex attractive by a bright display of scarlet immortelles.

W. J. Baker has been handling some fine Stevia serrata.

H. C. Geiger states that his firm, the Floral Exchange, will cut 30,000 tea roses during the second half of this month.

Myers & Samtman are cutting quantities of fine Beauties. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Last Saturday we were treated to some real winter weather. A big snow storm raged all afternoon and the glass went down to zero before Sunday morning. It is reported that some consignments came in frozen on Sunday morning. The business the past week among the retailers was very good in funeral work only; outside of this kind of work it was only fair. Our retailers are all busy making up wreathing and wreaths for Christmas sales. Ground pine is scarce and the commission men are asking as high as $12 per crate of 100 pounds. Holly is very plentiful and cheap and of very fine quality.

With the Christmas holidays close at hand, there is much speculation as to the amount of stock this market is going to have and the retailers hope that the growers will not engage in any pickling and hold stock back until the last day, as prices are almost as high now as they will be for Christmas. Much, of course, depends on the weather, which is very changeable at this time of the year. At the present time there are enough flowers in the market for the demand.

The supply of carnations is large and most of the flowers are of a fancy order, especially those sent in by Henry Baer, of Peoria, Ill., and H. W. Ude, Jr., of Kirkwood, Mo. Their Enchantress, Queen Louise and Lawson are fine. These command as high as 6 and 7 cents each. Other varieties bring $4 and only common sorts bring $3 per 100. In roses the supply is large in the second class stock; extra selects are scarce and in good demand at $10 per 100. Beauties are selling high and are not in oversupply, those of J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, being of the best. For extra fancy $10 per dozen is asked and from that down to $3 per dozen for fair stock. Belle Miller's Carnots are in great demand at from $8 to $10 per 100. Other stock from her place sells well.

Violets seem plentiful just now and we hope they will continue so until after the holidays; $1 per 100 is the price to date. Romans, Paper Whites and valley are in good supply at the usual prices. Christmas prices will be about the same as those quoted by the Chicago florists in our last big issue.

Florists' Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club held one of the largest attended meetings of the year last Thursday afternoon, thirty-one members being present and several distinguished visitors. There was also a fine exhibition of cut flowers, among them being a fine vase of the new Breitmeyer rose, La Detroit, and an extra fine vase of Dorner's new white carnations, Lady Bountiful and The Belle. These were exhibited by C. A. Kuehn.

Two essays were read, one from Wm. Scott, of Buffalo, N. Y., on "Greenhouse Heating," and the other by J. W. Dunford, on "Stem-rot," both being well received. Mr. Scott's essay was read by ex-President Fillmore. Both gentlemen received a hearty vote of thanks by the club. The meeting opened at 2:30, with all the officers present. John Koenig and Theo. Klockenkemper were elected to membership by a full vote. F. W. Bruenig and Henry Felter made application for membership. Mr. Brown, of London, England, who has charge of the landscape work of the British pavilion at the World's Fair grounds, was elected an honorary member of the club. The resignation of A. S. Halstedt was read and accepted.

The carnations exhibited by F. Dorner & Sons Co., of Lafayette, Ind., the judges, Messrs. Winter, Steidel and Dunford, voted very fine, having all the requirements of first-class carnations. The Breitmeyer rose, La Detroit, was voted a first-class pink rose by Messrs. Ammann, Fillmore and Emmons. The cut flowers were much admired and were one of the attractions of the meeting.

After Mr. Scott's essay a discussion was led by Max Herzog on "Greenhouse Heating," which was participated in by Messrs. Dunford, Emmons, Ammann, Ude, Winter and Fillmore. This was one of the features of the meeting which was much enjoyed by the members. Mr. Brown made a few remarks on greenhouse heating from an English standpoint and joined in the discussion. The hour was growing late and the question box was laid over until the next meeting.

For the next meeting of the club Walter Gilles, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, will read an essay on ferns and a discussion will be led by F. J. Fillmore on propagating roses. This meeting will be held on Thursday afternoon, January 14, at 2 o'clock.

Club Notes.

Fred Ammann and Henry Emmons were the only members present from across the river.

From Kirkwood, Vice-President Winter, H. G. Ude, F. W. Ude, Jr., and W. J. Pilcher were in attendance. Those from Clayton were J. W. Dunford, John Steidel and R. F. Tesson.

A new order of business has been inaugurated by the president at the meetings, that is to announce, "Does any member wish to become a member of the S. A. F.?" By this six new members were added.

State Vice-President Chas. Juengel is a very regular attendant and was busy talking up S. A. F. membership and succeeded in capturing a few.

Mr. Hummell and Walter Gilles, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, enjoyed the meeting very much and will not miss many after this.

Mr. Brown and Wm. Bouche, from the World's Fair grounds, came together and were much taken with the proceedings and promised to come often.

The club now has sixty-seven members and it is expected by the time of the Society of American Florists meets here in August, the membership will reach 100, and efforts will be made after the first of the year to accomplish this.

Charlie Kuehn and Frank Ellis, two of our wholesale men, were very much interested at the meeting. These two gentlemen never miss a meeting.

After the meeting adjourned the members missed Carl Beyer, Theo. Miller and Frank Ellis. They were afterwards found in a nearby bowling alley.

Messrs. Pilcher, Koenig and Kuehn promised not to talk chickens at the next meeting.

Various Notes.

Henry Baer, of Peoria, Ill., spent two days with us the past week, calling on the trade.

Rodger Peterson, of Cincinnati, was in town Friday, showing fine Gloire de Lorraine begonias to the trade at Kuehn's.

Miss Belle Miller, of Springfield, Ill., spent a day in St. Louis last week, buying Christmas presents.

Mr. Gullett, of Lincoln, Ill., came down on an excursion to see the sights, but was caught by the big snow storm, which prevented his going out to the World's Fair grounds.

The past week the Missouri Horticultural Society held its forty-sixth annual meeting at Columbia, Mo., and many the leading horticulturists of the state attended.

Charles M. Figeley, representing E. H. Hunt, of Chicago, is with us this week in the interest of bulbs and florists' supplies.

Shaw Banquet.

At the Mercantile Club last Friday night the fourteenth annual banquet was given to florists, nurserymen and gardeners by the directors of the Missouri Botanical Garden. The attendance was not quite so large as usual. The entertainment furnished by Messrs. Kessler and Taylor, of the World's Fair, was one of the features. They gave stereopticon views of the landscape work and buildings at the World's Fair grounds and lectured on them. Prof. Wm. Trelease acted as toastmaster in his usual happy style. Among the florists who attended were Emil Schray, J. F. Ammann, J. W. Dunford, R. F. Tesson, Frank Fillmore, Max Herzog, Otto Koenig, C. C. Sanders, Theo. Miller, Wm. C. Young, E. W. Guy, F. K. Balthis, R. J. Mohr, C. J. Juengel, J. J. Beneke and others. Andrew Meyer, Jr., our renowned park superintendent, was also present, but Park Commissioner Aull failed to come. The decorations were, as usual, very tasty.

Bowling.

The last bowling before the holidays was done Monday night, with only a few present. Mr. Warren, of Louisville, Ky., was a visitor. The scores:

Player.	1st.	2d.	3d.	4th.	T'l.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The last club meeting for the year developed an attendance of over fifty members and a most happy and harmonious time. Lyman B. Craw, of the Lord & Burnham Co., was elected a member and six new names were proposed. Letters of declination were read from Messrs. Birnie, Duckham, Haffner, Wheeler, Siebrecht and Manda, who were nominees for office. The voting for the club's offices resulted as follows: For president, Traendly, 17; Troy, 13; Siebrecht, 1; Beaulieu, 1. For vice-president, Traendly, 14; Du Rie, 9; Duckham, 3; Siebrecht, 3. For secretary, Young, 31; Wheeler, 1. For treasurer, Weathered, 31; Nash, 2. For trustees, Wallace, 28; Elliott, 25; Long, 13; Nugent, 12; Miller, 10; Thomas, 10. Mr. Traendly having received the distinguished honor of being elected both president and vice-president, a second election for the latter office resulted in the selection of Mr. Butterfield.

Eloquent addresses were made by the successful candidates, in which the club's welfare was the principal theme and everything said gives promise of a strenuous year in the hands of the new officers. Dinners, outings, bowling, exhibitions and interesting monthly entertainments being among the responsibilities assumed. The 1903 outing committee received the club's vote of confidence in their unanimous election to the dinner committee and the club almost unanimously decided upon a repetition of last year's banquet, in preference to a beef-steak dinner, notwithstanding the epicurean eloquence of Mr. Elliott in its favor. A committee, Messrs. O'Hara, Henshaw, Plumb and Elliott, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the deaths of George Cottam and Thomas Weathered.

The committee on awards, Messrs. Lenker, Birnie and Miller, gave an excellent report on the seedling carnations shown by John Reimels, of Woodhaven, L. I., and recommended a later exhibit of a larger number of blooms. Two varieties were shown, one an immense red, the parentage of Crane and Prosperity; the other a beautiful light pink, a cross of Mrs. Jas. Dean and Prosperity. Mr. Reimels has four pinks, four whites and several more reds in his collection of seedlings, samples of which he will doubtless exhibit at the Detroit convention.

The closing ceremonies included an eloquent address by E. G. Hill, who characterized the former speakers of the evening as "educated, brilliant and handsome," giving the palm to Mr. Elliott as the best looking of the galaxy. He said the west was as busy christening new roses and raising new carnations and chrysanthemums and so trying to keep within speaking distance of the Dailedouzes, Wards, Herringtons and Duckhams of the east. He said the westerners were up and doing and making progress, referred to the large areas of glass in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan and the old fear that its supply might be overdone, whereas the contrary had been most encouragingly demonstrated, flowers never having been in such demand nor such prices realized in the past as now. This, he said, speaks well for the florist business. Wealth and intelligence are on the increase and our business is bound to progress, as we are on the threshold of greater results than have ever been achieved. It was a most optimistic and inspiring address and was heartily appreciated by all.

Mr. Siebrecht, Mr. Traendly and Mr. Lang urged the present as an opportune hour for the formation of the New York Bowling Club for 1904 and a dozen members were enrolled and arrangements made for active work the first Monday in January. Nearly all the prominent bowlers of the club signed the roll and the new year will find an enthusiastic membership and the nucleus of a club that will do itself and the city credit in the great tournament at St. Louis in August.

And so ended one of the best meetings in the New York Florists' Club's history. The new officers are men of experience, ability and untiring energy and they will give a good account of themselves.

Various Notes.

Last Friday and Saturday the up state storm delayed the arrival of violets so seriously, especially the later day that thousands were left over for Sunday sales, which a terrific rain storm prevented, and by Monday the whole lot was unsalable. The shipments of violets continue in enormous quantities and it is seldom that the specials touch the top figure of $1.50; 75 cents to $1 is high tide many a day. The high values of other years need no longer be counted on, even for the holiday trade.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, has been here with his samples of Farleyense and Begonia Lorraine. Local offerings of the latter are greatly in excess of last season's supply.

E. Chauroux, of Flushing, a member of the Cut Flower Exchange, died on December 5. The business will be continued by his son.

John G. Esler, of Saddle River, N. J.; C. W. Cox, of San Francisco; J. D. Thompson, of Joliet, and E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., are recent visitors. Mr. Hill will remain several days and is visiting the leading carnation and chrysanthemum growers of this section.

The Cut Flower Co. is handling grand Beauties from the Scarboro factory of Paul M. Pierson, where every house is devoted to this variety, and the "Beauty King" declares he believes the Christmas rush will be quite up to other years.

Traendly & Schenck are handling their usual superb quality of violets and among their roses Golden Gate is coming especially strong and salable.

Not so long ago, it was difficult to get orders for Princess pine at 7 cents a pound; now good stock readily commands 12 cents, the poorest grade brings 10 cents and there will be nowhere near enough to go around.

Dunne & Co. have added to their sundries an invention by Mr. Dunne, a strap lock for valises and light trunks that is very serviceable and are having quite an extensive demand for it.

Jas. McManus has been shipping catleyas and Dendrobium formosum to Philadelphia, Chicago, Memphis and New Orleans and finds the demand growing rapidly.

M. Rice, of Philadelphia, was in the city Tuesday, visiting friends and making fraternal calls upon the supply and wholesale houses.

John J. Perkins is celebrating his thirty-first Christmas in the business this year, and has among his growers some who have been loyal to him over a quarter of a century. He is handling some special Brides and Maids and this season has a good stock of single violets for the holidays.

One of Mr. Ghormley's violet shippers is very patriotic, bunches of "red, white and blue" violets neatly arranged forming a unique and rapid selling novelty for Christmas.

Leopold Osternei, traveling salesman for Siebrecht & Son, known to all his customers as Leo, is just up from a four weeks' lay off in bed, the result of a horse kick on the knee.

Robert Kift, of Philadelphia, was in the city Wednesday and Thursday, visiting the growers and retailers and absorbing metropolitan conceptions for Christmas, which added to his own original methods, ought to wake up the proverbially restful town, and doubtless will. He anticipates a "conservative" holiday season.

Mrs. Henry Siebrecht, Sr., of New Rochelle, is recovering slowly from her long illness and is now out of danger.

The "white palace" being erected by Siebrecht & Son at Fifth avenue and Thirty-eighth street, is nearing completion and the immense store, the finest in America, if not in the world, will open December 20 in time for Christmas and with appointments and conveniences unexcelled.

Many of Phil Breitmeyer's friends in the east think the President would have been a more appropriate name for the new rose than La Detroit, but the beautiful convention city deserved some such recognition. It was a shame to have to miss the christening. Seems as though such a ceremony should take place during a convention week.

The Horticultural Society of New York met last Wednesday and J. T. Scott, of Randall's Island, spoke interestingly on his system of teaching horticulture there. Dr. Britton also gave an illustrated lecture and Nathan Smith & Son exhibited their new late pink chrysanthemum John Burton.

A. J. Fellouris has an extra large force at work these days, preparing stock for his Christmas trade in evergreens of every kind. He handles enormous quantities of galax and ferns and has excellent facilities for their presentation. His brother is expected back from Europe shortly.

John I. Raynor will hereafter receive a steady supply of the Croweanum fern, the sale of which he controls in New York.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BUFFALO.

A Stormy Sunday.

The blizzard which struck Buffalo on Sunday morning is not at all local. The weather, like armies in the field, is no respecter of any particular day of the week, and hurls its fierce blast at us whether it is going to keep us from church or not. In the little village where I weathered out yesterday's storm, there is a population of 400 all told. There are five churches and five congregations, if five or six families can be called such. At last night's Episcopal service there were just two individuals in the church, beside the parson and the five boys and girls of the choir. When the dominie began, "Dearly beloved brethren, the scripture moveth us in sundry places, etc." it sounded funny, because both the two brethren were women. Why not all get together and have one good church and pay some able man who could talk and entertain and morally instruct? Living is cheap in the country and a gifted young graduate might be induced to practice on this small community at $15 per week and house rent, but with such a division of creeds and split up into handfulls you can't pay big wages, although perhaps the salaries paid at present are a fair equivalent for the article received. Of those things I am a poor judge. A hundred years ago the congregations got their money's worth in the very liberal amount of fire and sulphur that was promised them in the indefinite future, but since roasting, toasting and brimstone no longer emanate from the pulpit there is an aching void. Yet what a lot there is to talk and act before "We'll brothers be for a' that."

Stock Shorter.

Flowers are decidedly shorter in supply. Our papers are full of accounts of social entertainments, which helps all along the line, but I have not heard of any events taxing the local market. We expect a merry and prosperous holiday season. Buffalo has grown greatly in population and manufactures within the past ten years and no labor troubles have arisen to upset the business equilibrium. Holly is arriving in quantity and of fair quality. It seems there is a scarcity of ground pine. Poor Lo and his squaw got snowed in this year, we can believe.

Hill and the Great West.

We were sitting almost in the gloaming, making carnation cuttings one day last week, when we heard in a muffled and strange voice a request for a carnation buttonhole. Striking a match we discovered we were honored with a visit from E. G. Hill. I would just as soon have expected to see Speaker Cannon or Elijah Dowie, but not half as well pleased. The time was all too short, but outside of floriculture I got E. G. to give me ten minutes' talk on the sights of the Pacific coast, the Canadian Pacific railroad, etc. It strikes me that at our next convention nothing would be more interesting than a half hour's talk from Mr. Hill on horticulture on the Pacific coast, not confining him strictly to horticulture, for who wouldn't like to hear from a truthful witness of the stupendous works of nature in a region that was almost an undiscovered country but a few years ago. We want to hear more of the Canadian Rockies and Mr. Hill's shooting adventures. Who among you realizes that this ardent, studious horticulturist of international fame is keen after big game. A florist of Vancouver strolled forth into the big timber with Mr. Hill and within five miles of his greenhouse chased up three bears, large ones. E. G.'s trusty aim made two of them bite the dust and he would have bagged the third, but he paused to contemplate the mammoth trees. Those who don't believe he shot the bears will please bear with this story. W. S.

The Market.

Business is still a trifle on the shady side, but considerable improvement is noted over last week. The demand is much more constant and better prices are the rule. The temperature is hovering very close to the zero mark, and this is beginning to make itself felt in the supply of stock. Prices are stiffening rapidly and short-stemmed stock, especially, is reaping the benefit. There were several decorations and also large funerals that helped use up the good stock. Most of the store men are busily engaged in putting up Christmas decorations, for which there is a large demand this year. Christmas bells made of chenille or immortelles are selling well, and most of the windows of the Fourth street stores are hung with them.

Carnations are scarce, as usual, with fancy stock as high as $6; ordinary grades bring $3. There are still a few mums coming in and they sell quickly. There are none that can be called fancy. Other stock is about as reported last week. Valley is selling very well now.

For Christmas it looks as if there will be a good supply of all kinds of stock, save carnations. These will be very short in supply, scarcely a drop in the bucket to what could be sold. It looks as if roses will be about equal to the demand. Violets will be very good property this year. Orders are now being booked and from present indication trade will be very heavy.

Various Notes.

Fred Gear has his store decorated in a way that should be seen to be appreciated. The entire ceiling and walls are covered with wild smilax, with electric lights and various Christmas novelties here and there.

The winter berry is being used a great deal and it adds greatly to many decorations.

Henry Schwarz has worked up a very good business in Norwood and says that he anticipates a fine trade for Christmas.

Several times lately our leading retailers have been disappointed in wild smilax arriving too late for use in the decorations it was ordered for. This is awfully discouraging and is something that can not be satisfactorily explained to the person who ordered the decoration. This, together with other affairs of a like nature has, perhaps, something to do with the gray hairs in the heads of florists who are otherwise still young enough.

MELROSE, MASS.—David L. Taylor, one of the pioneer florists of the state, died at his home here December 4, aged 81. He had been a resident of Melrose since 1847, when he started in the business on Emerson street. At one time his greenhouses were the most extensive in the United States, some nineteen or more separate houses. He retired from active business about four years ago. Mr. Taylor was a native of Scotland and leaves two sons and one daughter.

FIGHTING INSECTS.

With almost any class of plants grown under glass it is a case of waging continual war against insects and the vegetable grower has, I think, more than the usual share to contend with. Constant vigilance is necessary to keep them in check and prevention is always better than cure.

Greenfly is one of the most troublesome pests, especially in the lettuce house, and only those who have had experience in fighting it know how quickly this little fellow can multiply, for it does not take it and its offspring long to make a plant look sickly, once they get established. Tobacco stems freely used around the house is about the easiest way of upsetting their family arrangements. The stems should be tied in bundles, to prevent their getting scattered around, and laid on the hot water pipes. An occasional soaking with water will freshen the stems and when they fail to give off the desired aroma after being soaked, it is time to replace with fresh ones.

On the cucumbers red spider and sometimes thrips will put in their appearance, especially if the weather is such as necessitates hard firing and little air can be given. Frequent syringing is about the only preventive for these, but on account of the softness of the foliage too much force must not be used. A fine spray diligently applied will keep the plants clean, but to be effective it must be begun at an early stage of the plant's growth, before the insects put in their appearance.

The white tomato fly is of more recent introduction. It is only within the last few years that it has visited this section, and of all the insect enemies we have, it is the hardest to eradicate. I believe that nothing less than that extreme measure hydrocyanic acid gas will kill it out, but as this must be used so very carefully I would not recommend it to those who have had no experience with it. Tobacco stems distributed as recommended for greenfly, and frequent light smokings with tobacco powder, will keep it in check. I say light smoking as heavy smoking will injure the foliage of tomatoes very quickly. I like the powder better than stems to smoke with, as it burns more slowly, never causing a dense smoke. If started in the evening it will keep burning the greater part of the night. I place a 6-inch potful on a piece of tin, which is laid on the floor of the house, and in the center of the dust place a piece of live coal to start it. For a house 18x50 feet I use two potfuls, one near each end of the house. This makes the smoke just about as strong as the tomato plants will stand it.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis Mo., June, 1904.

CHICAGO seems to be the center of the sweet corn disturbance at present.

THE Sunday Review, of Decatur, Ill., contains a write-up of J. C. Suffern's work in seed breeding and growing.

MANY of the green podded varieties of beans which it was thought would thrash out big, are falling down in quite serious fashion.

THE recent report that C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., have fenced their barnyard is supplemented by late advices to the effect that the fence will soon be painted.

THE Customs Appraiser at Philadelphia has recently raised the valuation on several consignments of seeds from France without regard to what the stock was contracted for months ago.

CUCUMBER tests show up a great deal better than it was thought they would. Out of twenty different lots tested only a few have fallen below seventy per cent. This is considered a good showing for crops harvested this year.

THERE is one thing that must not be lost sight of when the value of sweet corn is in question. It is germination. Sweet corn that will test up to ninety per cent is of double the value of that which tests fifty to sixty per cent.

VISITED CHICAGO: Chas. W. Kimberlin, of J. M. Kimberlin & Co., Santa Clara, Cal.; C. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal.; W. H. Johns, of Sioux City, and his brother, who has charge of the Sioux City Seed Co. growing affairs at Millington, Mich.

THE Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, reports that its new onion set warehouse at Jefferson Park is quite an improvement over the city storage formerly used. A properly built onion house has many advantages, not the least being its added security as a frost proof shelter during zero weather.

SEVERAL inquiries have reached this office desiring full information as to the new postoffice ruling applying to inserts in seed catalogues. There has been no new ruling; the same rules apply this year as last. There is a summary of all the postoffice rules touching third class matter to be had at any postoffice for the asking.

THE appearance of the 1904 issue of some of the retail catalogues is expected shortly. It is hoped that the usual mesmeric sympathy will have worked in the minds of those who decide the prices. The bulk of the press work on many of the catalogues is well under way, consequently any radical price changing is out of the question. The standard varieties, as a rule, are likely to be priced about the same as last year. There may be considerable variation in the sweet corn prices. Cucumber prices are likely to be quite uniform, as the shortage of that standard is well understood. Onion seed may vary, but each individual firm has its own special stocks, which go regardless of the lower or higher price quoted by others. The standard varieties of onion are likely to be lower, rather than higher, as compared with last year. Green podded beans should be higher than last year; wax pods and poles about the same. Hubbard squash will stand an advance; other varieties in general will be about as last year. It is remarkable how uniformly prices average up in the seed catalogues when each firm is so cautious about giving anything out in advance as to what their prices will be. The source of supply is open to all, and all are used alike in the deliveries. There should be less uneasiness and more harmony in this matter of prices.

THE John H. Allan Seed Co. has just issued a circular letter to the trade, dated at Sheboygan, Wis., which shows a serious falling off from deliveries they expected to make some time back. They regret that the report comes so late, but state that conditions have been so unusual this season that nothing short of actual weighing up after milling and hand picking determines quantities. Estimates based upon the usual conservative methods of determining probable returns won't hold good this year. The report covers most of the varieties of peas and beans and it will be a disappointment to many who have been expecting better returns.

SALE OF LANDRETH FARMS.

Judge McPherson, in the United States District Court, on December 12, granted the petition of Bayard Henry, receiver of the bankruptcy estate of D. Landreth's Sons, seed merchants, for leave to sell certain property of the estate to Burnett Landreth and S. Philip Landreth. The property to be sold is the Bloomsdale and Reedland farms, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and Burlington county, New Jersey, and the Court approved the price, $13,563.97, by the receiver for the farms.

PHILADELPHIA SEED NOTES.

We are just getting advice from our western growers of cucumber seed, giving us percentages for delivery of crop 1903 which have been as follows:

	Per cent.
Improved Long Green.....	60
Extra Ey. Long Green.....	5
Long Green Turkey.....	25
Nichols' Med. Green.....	20
Improved White Spine.....	5
Peerless White Spine.....	25
Ex. Long White Spine.....	25
Arlington White Spine.....	20
Hill's Forcing White Spine.....	15
Evergreen White Spine.....	7
Early Cluster.....	45
Green Prolific.....	15
Ex. Ey. Green Prolific.....	15
Cool and Crisp.....	25
Japanese Climbing.....	30

Some of the lots sent in advance for early trade show this seed to be very light in weight and of poor appearance. Heretofore we would have been afraid to have sent out seed looking as it does, but under the pressure of short crops appearances will not count much so long as the strain is true. Some varieties have been reduced from one-third to one-half in bulk while milling.

One of the large growers states that the entire acreage of Chicago Pickle seed has been sold away from them, as well as forty acres of France and Jersey Pickle. It appears that some of the farmers have hidden seed and are now offering it to the trade through other channels. Not long ago a seed house here was offered by an outside party 400 pounds of Waterloo grown seed, White Spine cucumber, at $1.25 per pound. The seed was evidently held by a farmer who was under contract to deliver it to the grower. This same condition of affairs existed in a section of New Jersey where cucumber, tomato and egg plant seed is grown. Certain outside parties are offering cucumber and tomato seed at about double the contract price and we are certain that some seed house is being defrauded of this seed.

WATERLOO VS. FREMONT.

Under date of Waterloo, Neb., December 7, J. C. Robinson sends the following circular letter to the trade:

I have just received the announcement of removal as sent out by the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., who formerly were at this place. As this announcement does not state the facts as they appear to me, I wish to make this statement: In buying out the Western Seed and Irrigation Co.'s warehouses at this place there were some conditions that entered into the transaction outside of the actual money consideration. One of these conditions was that we were to jointly announce the change to the Seed Trade, and each was to have the privilege of sending out a personal circular letter, it being understood that such letter was to be of a satisfactory character to the other party.

You have received my circular letter, which was a very plain, moderate statement of the sale. Mr. Emerson's letter in behalf of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co. is very unjust to Waterloo, its soil, its people and its seed dealers. Emerson bettered his railroad facilities at Fremont by having the Chicago and North-western railroad tracks; other than this he is no better located than before. As to the soil, I would not trade one acre of my land at Waterloo for any two acres at Fremont, outside of the corporate limits of the city. On one side it is heavy wet gumbo and on other pretty nearly clear sand, only suitable for growing peanuts, and in some years possibly watermelons. As a matter of fact, Fremont has not and never will grow vine crops successfully, and Emerson has not been getting his vine seed around Fremont; neither has he failed with his crops here at Waterloo, as he states, for the reason that for four or five years past he has had very little indeed grown near Waterloo.

We are hard struck this year, but, notwithstanding it all, we have the best soil for growing vine seed that there is in the United States, but are unable to overcome floods and climatic conditions that extended fourteen miles west of us just as completely and just as destructively as here at home.

We wish Mr. Emerson well at Fremont, but, believing an injustice has been done in his letter of announcement, we wish to state that we are still in the ring here and purpose to be somewhere near the front on the home-stretch.

THE SEED GROWERS' TROUBLES.

I note the REVIEW closely, and as yet have seen but very little said concerning the situation of the seed grower. The last two seasons have been generally unsatisfactory to the vine seed growers. Most growers were unable to fill their orders complete, and under the circumstances were unable to get any benefit of the increased values of seeds. The cost of seed production is increasing, and the increased values of seeds certainly tempt one to cut out the contract business and sell his product on the market. This will be done largely if the dealers decline paying more for seed another year. The seed famine for two years in succession will practically clean up all surpluses and, should we make full crops next year, we would have no trouble to sell

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Roses, carnations and mums are getting scarcer, and if the cuts keep getting lighter there will be a decided shortage for the Christmas demand, and prices will probably reach $8, $12 and $15 for roses and $3, $4, $6 and $8 for carnations. A few mums will be on hand, but no prices are quoted on them. All of our rose growers are off crop, and there will not be any change for the better until about January 15. The carnation growers are complaining bitterly about the small cut so far this season and unless the plants do much better than those of last season the profit on the year's work will be very small.

Various Items.

The weather up to Saturday was fine; then a thaw with rain set in, which made it very disagreeable, and on Sunday it was snowing, with a high wind and the temperature about 20 degrees above.

The west side florists have been very busy the past week, with funeral orders, the Ehrbar Floral Co. having one seven-foot broken column that required four men to handle. This was sent to the funeral of one of our patrolmen, with many other fine pieces. C. B. Wilhelmy sent out many pieces last week, and was very busy. H. Piggott was too busy to stop and tell how the new store was doing.

C. B. Wilhelmy has cut most of his mums and says he is very sorry to have them so near finished. E.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Trade has fallen off a little, which is generally the way in this city before the Christmas rush begins. If it were not for the debutantes there would have been a greater slump in the cut flower market. At the reception for Miss Fitch, bouquets of orchids, American Beauties and violets were presented. The drawing rooms were bowers of Bride and Bridesmaid roses, maidenhair ferns, being used for a background. Miss Chittenden was also presented with bouquets of roses and violets in profusion and the rooms decorated with palms and cut flowers.

Holly and Christmas greens have made their appearance in great quantities and Christmas bells and chimes are seen in all the windows.

You lose a cent, the price of a postal, if the samples we send you do not prove that RIGHT RIBBONS are better in quality and lower in price than the ribbons you are now using. Being better in quality and cheaper, you will save many cents, (yes, dollars as well) and improve the appearance of your flowers. No other mill has better facilities for manufacturing the right kind of ribbons for florists to use. Ribbons are woven and colors dyed specially to match, and the result is a trifle advance over the usual kind. Write us for samples of Holly, the Violet shades, the Foliage blends; and remember, when buying RIGHT RIBBONS you save all between profits.

Violets seem to be the only cut flower which exceeds the demand. Roses keep up to the demand, although red ones are being held back as much as possible. Carnations are the scarcest cut flower in the market and it is a continuous hustle to get enough to fill orders.

A few sweet peas have been sold but the people of this city do not take kindly to sweet peas until March or April.

Most all the retailers have been to New York and New Jersey buying up large stocks of cyclamen, Lorraine begonias and azaleas, as they expect this year to be a record breaker. S. H. W.

The Market.

We are at present enjoying what is considered winter weather in Canada, although we have had rather a severe spell of it for this time of the year, especially from a florist's standpoint. Dark weather has prevailed for three weeks now, and following, as it has, a long spell of bright, warm weather, florists have been thrown off their guard and present appearances are that we will have a fine lot of stuff about the middle of January. Of course we do not intend to try to postpone Christmas to suit our belated comrades, but we can only extend them our sympathy. It is a peculiar thing to note that the florists who were considered to be behind time, who were late getting their new houses built, and late getting them planted, are going to be the men who will have the heaviest cuts for Christmas. The fact of the matter is that while the florists who had their houses planted early cut their first crop some time ago and expected their second crop for Christmas, are out, while the florist who was behind will be cutting his first crop. We don't recommend this system, as he might not hit on this again for a long time, but I have mentioned this to show the slow growth during the last month.

Business has been brisk in all lines and especially do we notice the big demand for supplies, including Christmas bells and other novelties. We do not hesitate to make the statement that one store in Toronto this year will sell as many bells as were sold in the whole of Canada last year. The demand for wreath-ing has been great and with the heavy snow in early winter, the supply has been very limited and nearly all of the supply houses are run out of moss for wreathing.

Notes.

Dunlop, during the week, has been showing a fine window of poinsettias and Prosperity carnations, the higher decorations for the window being Christmas bells and southern smilax. The attractiveness of this window stopped many a passer-by.

S. Tidy & Son have a window of American Beauties, which were certainly a credit to the grower. They are exceptionally fine for this time of the year.

We noticed among visitors to town this week: Mr. Webster, of St. Thomas; Miss F. E. Townsend, of Hamilton, and W. Findley, of Brampton. D. J.

BAYSIDE, L. I.

John McDonald has begun an action in the Supreme Court, as administrator of his wife, Sarah, against John Taylor, to recover $20,000 damages for her death. The complainant says that McDonald was a fireman in the employ of Mr. Taylor and lived with his wife in a cottage owned by the florist. The plaintiff alleges that in January last, after a quarrel, the defendant ordered him to vacate the house. The weather was very cold and the wife in delicate health. She died later, and McDonald claims that Taylor is responsible for her death. The defendant made a motion before Justice Mareau December 8 to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs, but Justice Mareau denied the motion.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—Thomas Devoy & Sons have a new geranium named Telegraph which was certificated at the recent show and which will be disseminated next year. It is a very robust grower and profuse bloomer.

MEXICO, MO.—C. C. Wonneman started in business eight years ago, with two houses containing about 3,000 feet of glass. He has steadily enlarged until he now has 10,000 feet of glass, growing a miscellaneous stock for retail trade. Two more houses will go up next spring. This fall a new brick boiler house was built and a Boynton heater installed, which has proved very satisfactory.

PACIFIC COAST.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.—The Leedham Bulb Company is now cutting large quantities of Paper White narcissi from outside beds, and is beginning to cut Ard Righ daffodils inside. Geo. Butler has purchased the glass for a large new house to be erected soon. The vines in his cucumber houses are in splendid shape and he is beginning to cut in quantity for market.

PLANT NOTES.

Carnations and Gophers.

Any nurseryman in this part of California will tell you that the demand for carnation plants for use in private gardens is not as large as it was formerly. There are several reasons for this. The skill of the greenhouse grower has developed such a large, perfect flower and long stem, that those grown outside, even under the best conditions, are not to be compared either in texture of bloom or quality of stem and the only dealers who use them are the street vendors who sell large bunches for a mere trifle during the spring and summer months. Another reason given by people who have often very fine collections of garden plants is that the gophers have such a liking for the roots of any kind of a carnation that when they taste one they burrow under an entire garden and eat off all the carnation roots first before they bother with anything else. One gopher will clear out a whole bed of pinks in a night, leaving nothing but the wilted tops on the ground, each plant eaten completely off below the surface.

Roses, and many other garden plants are next in line for Mr. Gopher and in a couple of days he can do many dollars' worth of damage. To exterminate these annoying rodents I have found that carrot and strychnine are the best. Open the freshest looking burrow to a depth of eighteen inches and take out all the loose soil until you are sure you have found the hole. Then having previously cut up a carrot into cubes of about one inch square in which you have made a little slit with the point of a penknife, drop in about as much strychnine as you can pick up with the point of the knife. Put these pieces of carrot each on the end of a sharp stick and push them down the gopher hole. That gentleman always makes a tour of inspection very shortly after his burrow is opened and when he finds the carrot, eats it and that ends him. It is a good plan to put a slice in each run, as there is often more than one gopher in a garden. I have found that they do not eat carrot so readily when it has been much handled and it is a good idea to soak the pieces in a pan of water before you put the poison in them and avoid touching with the fingers at all after that.

In this way I have cleared many acres of ground from these pesky gophers, and with a little patience I have never known this method to fail. I have discarded traps of all kinds, as they do not do the work quickly enough. Care should be taken that the pieces of carrot if found to be uneaten at the end of twenty-four hours are renewed and the others disposed of where children or pet animals of any kind will not get at them.

Returning to carnations, the varieties that succeed outside best in the central portion of California are in whites. Flora Hill; reds, America and Portia; pink, Ethel Crocker and Scott; and yellow, Eldorado. Most of the variegated varieties burst the calyx badly, and some of our finest greenhouse sorts are of little value when planted in the garden. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had clear, cold weather all the week and considerable frost at night. Business is very quiet. Several of our retail men have had considerable funeral work the last two days but outside of this there is little doing. Carnations are more plentiful than they were a year ago and they are somewhat cheaper. Fancy varieties can be bought wholesale at three dozen for $1 and most of the other sorts at 25 cents per dozen. This is ridiculously cheap but we have many more growers this season than ever before and, as business is not rushing at present, there is plenty of stock to go around and low prices are the rule. Good roses are scarce, however, and fancy stock is not in evidence at all. Good American Beauties sell wholesale at from $2 to $3 per dozen for the best, and short stemmed can be had at about half that price. Bridesmaid, Bride, Testout and Kaiserin are selling at 50 cents per dozen for the shorter stemmed flowers and 75 cents per dozen for fairly good stock. Maiden hair fern is scarce with most of the growers, but there is plenty of asparagus and similax. Violets are still scarce; in fact, I have never seen so few of them for sale on the streets at this season of the year. The cold, frosty weather seems to keep them back so much that most of the growers who usually cut from ten to twenty dozen bunches per day have to be satisfied with half that quantity. The best flowers sell at from $1 to $1.25 per dozen bunches and the bunches are not very large either. It will be necessary to have another good spell of rainy weather before violets become plentiful. Roman hyacinths are being brought in in fair quantity and Paper White narcissi are more plentiful. They are used by the smaller dealers in large quantities in funeral work and sell wholesale at $1 per hundred stems. Chrysanthemums are daily getting scarcer and more shabby: that is, those grown outside. Some very fine Bonnaffon and Mrs. Jerome Jones are exhibited by Sievers & Boland, but they are about the last of the season.

Notes.

James Skinner, of Portland, Oregon, is in town. He ships large quantities of Oregon graperoot leaves (Mahonia aquifolium) to the dealers in green goods here and is just now making arrangements to deliver several car loads of Christmas trees to the dealers. G.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Business in the stores and nurseries is excellent. The local carnation growers have been unable to fully meet the demand, and consignments have been received from San Francisco.

Captain Gray, of the Ingleside Floral Co., has placed his nursery in charge of J. Gilmore, who was formerly with E. W. McLellan & Co., of Burlingame, Cal.

The Ocean Park Floral Co. is at present busy planting carnations out in the field, direct from the propagating bench.

Dietrich & Huston, nurserymen, are putting up two new lath houses and a large propagating house.

A good many eastern gardeners have arrived in Los Angeles during the last two months, and I believe this is due to an article signed "Poppy" in another trade paper last August, stating that there was not a competent gardener in southern California. There are and always have been gardeners of the best type in southern California. "Poppy" was driving a hotel bus not long ago. A few years in the nursery business would be a benefit to him.

There is plenty of room here for practical growers with capital enough to engage in business. Of the other kind the supply more than equals the demand.

Considerable has been said and written about stem-rot in carnations. It can be avoided by proper treatment. When planting out in the field plants for later use under glass, use a hoe and open a furrow as deep as your hoe. Fill this furrow two-thirds full with as good soil as you will use on your bench, and then rake in enough of the field soil to fill up the trench. Then with the hoe chop the length of the trench, after which tread the trench with both feet, stepping sideways, and rake off to even it. This results in concentrating the roots, the sides of the trench being harder than the soil in it, and the roots run in the trench instead of over the field. This enables you to lift a ball of fibrous roots instead of merely a main root and a few branches. Plant as deep as your plants will allow. When lifted for the bench you will find a stem at least three inches long. Plant in bench to the top of the ball, and the stem, if the plant is not waterlogged at the first watering, will harden so there will be no danger of stem-rot or other rot attacking them.

For field blooming stock I advise planting as shallow as possible, thereby keeping the stem well up in the light and air.

The Market.

Business for the past week was very good. The demand for most all the material was for weddings and debutantes. The quality of stock is gradually becoming better. Carnations are coming in a much better condition, and the outlook for Christmas on this flower, is very promising. American Beauties are the best roses in the market at the present time. A limited quantity of Maids and Brides are being received. In novelties, sweet peas, baby primroses, mignonette and sweet alyssum all meet with good demand. The plantmen report a very good demand for decorative stocks.

PLANTS FOR FORCING.

Azaleas for Easter Forcing.—Orders for Azaleas received on or before December 24th will be executed at import prices. After this date spring prices will take effect. 10 to 12-inch crowns, $4.50 per dozen, $35.00 per 100; 12 to 14-inch crowns, $6.00 per dozen, $45.00 per 100; 14 to 16-inch crowns, $7.50 per dozen, $55.00 per 100.

Hardy Azalea Mollis, for Forcing Early.—Azalea Mollis is gaining more favor every season. It can be forced into flower quickly at a trifling cost of heat and labor. Its colors are most pleasing and the first cost of the plants very low. We are supplying at present an unusually fine lot of well budded bushy plants, 15 to 18 inches high, $4.50 per dozen, $35.00 per 100.

Deutzias, for Forcing.—Strong two-year-old, field-grown plants, suitable for 6 and 7-inch pots. Gracilis, 75 cents per dozen, $6.00 per 100; Gracilis Rosea, $1.00 per dozen, $8.00 per 100; Gracilis Lemoinei, $1.00 per dozen, $8.00 per 100.

Forcing Lilacs.—A fine lot of pot-grown plants, well set with buds and in prime condition for forcing, $6.00 per dozen, $45.00 per 100.

Rhododendrons, for Forcing.—Rhododendrons are being used more extensively every year for forcing, and in anticipation of an increased demand we have this fall imported a large number of well-shaped, finely-budded plants of varieties especially suited for forcing, and we are in position to offer exceptional values in this line in plants covered with buds. 20 to 24 in. high, $1.00 each, $11.00 per doz., $90.00 per 100; 24 to 30 in. high, $1.50 each, $15.00 per doz., $115.00 per 100.

HENRY A. DREER, Philadelphia, Penna.

LA DETROIT.

It is stated that over 11,500 suggestions were offered in the contest for the premium of $100 offered by John Breitmeyer's Sons for the name which should finally be adopted for their new rose. The winner is Mrs. Ezra Miller, of Landisville, Pa. The name was also suggested by two other women, Mrs. Henry Pfeiffer and Mrs. Frank H. Croul, both of Detroit, although the winner was twenty-four hours ahead in the competition. A handsome lithograph of the rose will be sent to each one who offered a name.

The rose is considered the most important of recent acquisitions to our list. It is a seedling of Mme. Caroline Testout and Bridesmaid. It was raised by George Hopp, in Grand Rapids four years ago, and was acquired by the Breitmeyers early in the spring. Over 17,000 plants are now being grown for propagating, 11,000 in Detroit; 4,000 in New Jersey, and 2,000 in Grand Rapids. April 1 is the date set for the distribution.

CYCLAMEN.

Enquirer sends a cyclamen corm with diseased leaves and buds. He says they were kept plunged in tobacco stems all summer, in a partly shaded house. They grew finely till November, when they were put in a warmer house. Then they threw up a fine show of buds, when the young growths began to "draw and pucker, both leaves and buds." "Pucker" is a very good word and describes their appearance better than any word I can think of. I could not see any signs of aphid or thrips and I think the trouble is that the little cyclamen mite got in his work. I don't know the scientific name of this little pest or whether it is peculiar to the cyclamen only, but it exists and is microscopical in size. I have seen only this fall two first-class gardeners lose their cyclamen by the same trouble, so don't think, Enquirer, that it's all your fault or that you made any great mistake in their culture. It's not very definite, what you mean by putting them into a warmer house; 55 degrees at night is warm enough after you have to use artificial heat. My advice is poor consolation, but it is sound. If all your cyclamen are anything like the sample sent, don't bother a moment with them; consign them to Sheol without delay and start again. There is time yet to sow for next winter's plants, and I hope we shall be able to find some means of keeping down this small but destructive foe.

MONTREAL.

The annual meeting of the Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club took place at Alexandra Chambers Monday, December 7. There was a good attendance and the business was put through with dispatch. The reports were of a most satisfactory nature, and one of the most gratifying features was that regarding the chrysanthemum exhibition, which showed the receipts to have been $659.29, while the expenditures were $639.12. Of this latter amount $430.25 was expended in prizes.

Before proceeding to the elections the superintendent of the show, Joseph Bennett, was presented with a case of cutlery in recognition of the good work that he had done. The election of the officers for the coming year resulted as follows: President, R. W. Whiting; first vice-president, A. Gibb; second vice-president, C. Craig; secretary-treasurer, W. H. Horobin; assistant secretary, Herbert Eddy; committee, J. Walsh, A. C. Wilshire, W. C. Hall, W. Alcock, J. Eddy, and A. H. Walker.

It was decided to hold the annual dinner on the third Monday in January.

VINELAND, N. J.—Charles P. Lord, who is both borough recorder and a florist, has some American Wonder lemons with fruits measuring fourteen inches and weighing a pound and a quarter.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—R. F. Preusser has invented a pin for attaching bouquets to ladies' garments. The first one manufactured was presented to the daughter of Secretary Wilson, of the Agricultural Department.

NORWALK, O.—Frank H. Evans and E. J. Peat have formed a partnership and have built a neat store, with greenhouse attached at Whittlesey avenue and Monroe street. The opening took place December 12.

TORONTO, ONT.—John H. Dunlop, the well known grower and retailer, was married at Nashua, N. H., November 26, to Mrs. Eleanor F. Farley, of that place. They will give a reception to their friends here January 6.

The Best Bright Pink
Carnation in Sight...
It Never Bursts.

This will be sure to become a standard commercial variety on account of its fine color, good form, size, stem and floriferousness. Nothing we have ever had on our place could touch it in blooming. Every shoot a flower stem and never off crop. Stands a foot above Lawson throughout the season and is easy to manage. The color is much brighter than Joost but not so dark as Lawson in the dark days of winter. It keeps its bright color.

Come and see it growing.

You will want to grow some of it yourself.

CARNATIONS

In placing your orders for 1904 Novelties, remember the two Greatest WHITE CARNATION NOVELTIES ever offered to the trade....

Lady Bountiful and The Belle.

FOR EARLINESS--We beat them all. FOR QUALITY--We lead.
FOR QUANTITY--We have the Commercial White Carnations.

GROWTH and HABIT are just right, none better, and when we say they are no croppers, but early and continuous flowering, we mean—they commence with the earliest, if not before all others, and continue so without cessation throughout the entire season. They are easy doers, thriving well under ordinary conditions and respond readily to good treatment. They are also easy propagators and will be found most satisfactory varieties in every way.

Our large stock still enables us to offer some February delivery.

Price — $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000; 2500 at $95.00 per 1000; 5000 at $90.00 per 1000.

We also offer a set of five distinctly novel Carnations. The combination of colors is most beautiful and very attractive. For full description and prices send for our Descriptive Price List. We can also supply all the leaders of the 1904 Novelties at introducers' prices.

In making up your list of 1904 wants, do not forget we can supply the best of the 1903 Novelties and also of the Standard Varieties in select, graded, well rooted cuttings at prices consistent with well grown stock.

ASPARAGUS COMORENSIS. We have only a few hundred of the 3½-inch size left. Well grown stock, $12.00 per 100.

FLAMINGO

The finest scarlet carnation ever introduced. Brilliant color; large, fine flower; fragrant; great keeper; long, stiff stems; early, free, continuous and ideal in habit.

ALBATROSS

The whitest of the whites. Early, will produce fine flowers in the field. A constant bloomer, never produces a weak stem, strongly clove scented. A most extraordinary keeper, a business carnation, a money-maker.

SUNBIRD

The strongest, most vigorous and most prolific of the yellows. Beautiful form, large flower, stiff stems, as free as any variety, is universally admired and sells readily.

OMAHA.

The past week, compared to the previous ones, was somewhat quiet. The cause was probably the indifferent weather, one day rather warm but cloudy, the next day the thermometer registers zero, and surely such weather is not a trade producer.

The monthly meeting of the Nebraska Florists' Society was called to order by President J. J. Hess on December 10. After the minutes of previous meeting were read and approved the chair was turned over to President-elect S. R. Falconer. There seemed to be a new life injected into the society, two new members were elected with two ex-members re-instated. It is hoped by all that such interest may keep up. Owing to the lateness of the hour but one game of tenpins was rolled. Sides chosen by Hess and Bath, of five men each, were pitted against each other. Through the excellent work of Ellsworth on the home stretch, Bath and his braves won out by thirteen pins. After the holidays a bowling meet will probably be held each week.

CAMBRIDGE CITY, IND.—Wm. J. Hartje, the florist, has moved to Indianapolis with his family.

SEDALIA, Mo.—On December 7 fire did $800 damage at the greenhouses of C. A. Pfeiffer; no insurance. The blaze originated in the boiler house.

RICHMOND, IND.—The Quaker City Machine Company has secured the contract for ventilating the Government building at the St. Louis World's Fair.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Business does not improve, for the cotton situation and the reduction in wages in the mills has everybody guessing. All hands are fixing up for Christmas.

Wm. P. Pierce is out with a new turnout. His friends gave him a surprise party Tuesday evening, December 8, and presented him with a new harness, blanket and whip, City Auditor McGurk making the presentation speech. Mr. Pierce responded in a very graceful manner.

The Florists' Club held the regular meeting at S. S. Peckham's greenhouses in Fairhaven Thursday evening, December 10. Mr. Peckham carried the members from the car to his greenhouses and also brought them back to the city after the meeting. We had a very interesting session and elected one new member. Mr. Munson, the box man, from New Haven, Conn., was with us with his usual bunch of good stories. Mrs. Peckham provided a nice lunch and we had a nice entertainment after the meeting, Uncle Sammie's orchestra, singing and dancing by the Pierce brothers and piano solos by Geo. Pasell. C.

Novelties In Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bratt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

should tie your roses and flowers with Right Ribbons. You will be surprised at the added distinction and elegance which the Right Ribbons impart. Strange, the Right Ribbons cost you no more than the ordinary kind bought elsewhere, and yet, the reason is plain. Right ribbons are manufactured with a distinct purpose in view.
 This purpose is—Ribbons woven in colors to perfectly match Roses, Violets, the Foliages. Ribbons woven lustrous and of quality. Usually these would cost more than the ordinary kind, but when buying direct from the mill "you save all between profits."

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Seasonable Treatment.

By the time these notes reach you the Christmas rush will be over and your attention will be turned toward getting things back to normal conditions again. Whether this will prove a difficult task or not will depend altogether on how considerate you were of your plants this week and last. If you used good judgment and did not allow greed to get the upper hand, you will not find it such a big job, but how many there are who cannot see past the extra dollars they could make by taxing their plants a little heavier. Every year we see much poor, soft, weak-stemmed stuff sent in by growers of this class, and isn't it strange that they can't understand why their stock does not grade up later on with that of the wiser grower who does not let his greed run away with him at such times of temptation? At the time of this writing reports are not very flattering in regard to the cut of carnations in this section, and I expect to hear of the usual amount of kicking about soft stuff after Christmas.

When I started this letter I did not mean to preach about this over-forcing, but I feel that until it is stopped or at least materially checked, too much cannot be said against it. What I started to write about was how to get back to the normal temperature, etc. Immediately after Christmas you should begin to lower the temperature as gradually as you raised it. More direct harm will result from a sudden large drop in the temperature than could possibly result from an equally sudden rise. You know how a variable temperature will cause many varieties to burst many of the calyxes, and then just think how harmful a drop of 10 degrees must be to plants that have been working at a high tension for a couple of weeks. While the growth would not show the effects of such a drop, in the shape of mildew or dropping leaves like some other plants, it surely could not do the plants any good. It would certainly cause a severe check to the growth and the next crop of blooms would likely show it.

I said begin to reduce the temperature right after Christmas. Often you will want a good cut right after the Christmas rush is over and the temptation is great to run at the high temperature over New Year's day. Don't do it. Your plants won't stand such a long period of overwork. By January 1 you ought to be back to normal conditions again. If your plants seem a trifle soft a dose of wood ashes or air-slaked lime will do them good. Plenty of ventilation will also help them materially, but avoid extreme changes.

Here's hoping that you will have favorable weather, a large cut and sale for all you can cut at good figures, and as a result a Merry Christmas.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Treatment After Christmas.

When these notes appear the Christmas strain will be over, at least on the plants, and while recovering from your personal extra exertions do not forget that your stock must be gotten into normal condition. I am supposing that you raised the temperature somewhat to increase the cut, but even if it was from the eyes on the branches from which the blooms were cut and let the growth be well under way before fertilizers of any kind are applied.

Hard firing presents the liability of red spider and aphides appearing, so while the visible supply of blooms is small take advantage of the opportunity to syringe thoroughly, choosing the first bright day. Also give the houses a liberal dose of tobacco smoke.

We are now past the time of decrease in length of day, but as the sun begins its return journey cold weather may be expected and with all the strain of Christmas the plants are yet to experience much forcing. In view of this no detail, however small, can be omitted, if for no other reason than the fact that during the next two months the bulk of propagation takes place and

.....GREETING.....

DECEMBER, 1903

TO THE READERS OF THE TRADE PAPERS AND MEMBERS OF THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS AND ORNAMENTAL HORTICULTURISTS:

I take great pleasure in wishing each and every one a Happy and Most Prosperous New Year.

I view with regret the result attained in the profession during the year 1903, especially the latter half, as not being up to expectations, due to various causes.

It is my earnest desire that all of you will use every effort to make the year 1904 a banner year in producing good stock and realizing good and satisfactory prices for the same.

As the President of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists it is my duty to earnestly request all readers of this greeting, especially non-members of our Society, to pause and reflect on the importance of becoming members of the same. It is an important matter, one of national importance and most worthy of your consideration.

Please send in your membership dues to our secretary at once. Nothing would please me more than a hearty and speedy response

In conclusion let us hope to meet all old faces and as many new as the old ones can induce to come to our convention at St. Louis.

With kind wishes, believe me,

Yours sincerely,

Philip Breitmeyer.

President-Elect S. of A. F. and O. H.

not necessary or for any reason you did not, the chances are that an increased amount of bloom was taken off at this time. This means the removal of considerable wood from the plants, and can be said to give the plants more or less of a check, such as would occur when any plant has been cut back. This check will be slight if extra care is taken in watering to give no more than is necessary, the object being to run the soil a trifle on the dry side for a week or ten days, while the balance between top and roots is being restored.

For the same reason, it is best to delay feeding or top dressing until such time as there is evidence of new growth it goes without saying that good health in the plants is needed then, if ever.

Indianapolis and Richmond Gem.

It seems proper to mention in passing, the condition of these two sorts at this time, as it may be interesting to know that the plants are a mass of buds and I am conservative in estimating a cut of three to five blooms per plant from each variety this week. Indianapolis has improved greatly the past month in color, form, length of stem and size. A bench of Richmond Gem would be very desirable just now, in view of the heavy demand for red.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

SHAW GARDEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

William Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, announces that two scholarships at the garden will be awarded prior to the first of next April. These scholarships are provided by the board of trustees and include, besides free tuition, free lodgings in a dwelling adjoining the garden and a wage of $250 for the first year and $300 per year for not more than the following three years during which the scholarship may be held. Prof. Trelease will receive applications for these scholarships up to March 1, 1904, and on March 8 a preliminary examination will be held. Should there be more applicants than scholarships, a competitive examination will be held March 11 and 12, the subjects being those usually taught in the public schools. To be eligible the candidate must be between the ages of 14 and 20.

LIQUID FERTILIZERS.

From now on during the remainder of the season, where the plants are in a vigorous state and the benches full of roots, stimulants in a liquid form can be used with great benefit. For this purpose there is nothing better and safer than fresh cow manure, which contains nearly all the elements necessary in their proper proportions, with little or none of those caustic properties so prevalent in chemical preparations.

This should be placed in a tank with sufficient water added to cause speedy fermentation, after which it should be drained off into another tank and water added to reduce it to the proper strength. For a first application it should be rather weak. After applications can be made stronger without incurring any danger.

The correct time to apply this is when the young wood is from three to four inches in length, and should be continued at least once every alternate week till the buds are well developed, and should be discontinued when the buds show color. Sheep, poultry and pigeon manures, being all of a more concentrated nature, should be used with great caution and in much smaller quantities.

As this form of food is so easily and quickly assimilated great care should be exercised regarding the strength, especially if any of the chemically concentrated foods are used and should be first tried on a small scale. The use of ammonia and nitrate of soda at certain stages of growth are also very beneficial. These being very powerful and their effects being immediate, they should be used with great caution and in a very weak solution, one pound of either being sufficient for 100 gallons of water.

During dark weather, when the days of sunshine are few and far between, it is safer to use any of the preparations in a very weak form and frequently, rather than run any risks by giving it strong. As the days get longer the strength can be gradually increased, keeping all the time a strict watch on the effect produced. Weak or unhealthy stock is unable to use food in this form and any troubles they may be suffering from will be aggravated. RIBES.

TROUBLE WITH FUNGUS.

Can you tell me what is the matter with the Bride sent herewith? They start to die from the top. I see signs of the disease in the Maids and Gates, but the Brides are affected the worst. I have one grafted plant that has the same trouble. Can you give a remedy? W. K. P.

These plants are infected by the parasitical fungus known as rose anthracnose (Gloeosporium rosæ). This fungus attacks the wood near the top of the cane, depriving that portion of the stem above the point of attack of all nourishment, causing the leaves to become thin and yellow and eventually to fall off. It spreads very rapidly, usually in the direction towards the top of the cane, while the underpart of the bush continues to fallen, these should be collected and burned. The affected parts of the stems should be cut off, cutting well back, and also burned. Spray once a week with Bordeaux mixture; keep the soil rather dry, give free ventilation on all favorable occasions and whenever possible keep a crack of air on during the night. Plants which are so badly infested as the smaller of the specimens should be pulled up and destroyed; they are past redemption.

I particularly commend the way these plants were packed, they having reached me in as fresh a condition as when they were lifted from the bench, which condition considerably simplifies a diagnosis. RIBES.

TROUBLES.

As you invite correspondence, I submit a few of our troubles and hope to get some light on them. First, is mildew on roses contagious? During one of the very cool nights in September a door in our rose house blew open and the roses got badly mildewed. Since then we have treated them with sulphur in various forms, but the new growth seems still mildewed, while they have not been exposed to cool draughts since the first exposure. Second, will it do to propagate from such wood?

What can be done to get rid of moles? We have our carnations in ground beds and the moles are rambling all through the beds. They work too deep to see their road marks on top of the ground. I have tried sulphide of carbon, also earthworms soaked in strychnine, all to no effect. If anybody can suggest a remedy that will drive the little pests away we shall be truly thankful.

We have a young man in our employ who is a sort of a crank on electricity. He has rigged a battery in the rose house, so arranged that when the temperature gets down to 53 degrees it rings a bell in his bedroom, and wakens him so he can send out strong young canes which are in turn attacked and destroyed. A microscopical examination of the affected leaves and stems will reveal pinkish colored blotches which keep on bursting and scattering the spores in countless numbers.

If the trouble is not caused it is greatly fostered by a moist and stagnant atmosphere, great fluctuations of temperature and imperfect drainage. As the fungus continues to grow and develop spores on the leaves, even after they have replenish fire; then he can go to sleep again without risk as to oversleeping and letting his fire go out. I do not suppose it would be very useful in a large establishment, but in a small place like ours (about 4,000 feet of glass) it makes it easy for the fireman. J. W. M.

Yes, mildew is contagious, and will continue to spread, grow and scatter the spores by millions, which, if the conditions are suitable, will find a lodgment, germinate and spread like the parents, ultimately destroying the bushes. The surest remedy at this season is to paint the pipes with a mixture of lime and sulphur, applying once a week until it disappears. Until the mildew is destroyed and a healthy growth has commenced it would be better not to use such wood, as it would very likely be too weak to form strong, healthy roots.

The best method of getting rid of moles in greenhouses is a good trap in the care of a tricky trapper.

The thermostat is good for a small place. There used to be an invention on the market, which instead of ringing a bell, dumped the occupant of the bed on the floor. Pleasant, eh? RIBES.

THE OELSCHIG PLACE.

There are those who believe that the progressive spirit which has enthused our trade in the north these recent years has not yet been awakened in the south, but in this they are mistaken. Of course climatic conditions and environment compel, or make possible, as the case may be, many modifications of the practices in vogue in the regions of lower temperatures, but the wish to go ahead is manifest and the energy is shown in the recent development of many places.

A. C. Oelschig, of Savannah, Ga., has been steadily adding to his place until he has built up a range which would be a credit to any city of its size. He has everything in the most modern shape. The entire place is lighted with electric light. There is a windmill which pumps into a tank of 12,000 gallons capacity, but the windmill is taken down during the stormy season, September and October, and then a gasoline engine does the work; also at other times it supplements the wind in pumping from the artesian well, 387 feet deep. The gasoline engine pumps 2,000 gallons an hour and furnishes power for a circular saw, grindstone, emery wheel and drills. Mr. Oelschig says it saves its cost in labor every year.

One of the accompanying views shows as much of the place as it is possible to get in one photograph, including a range of new houses for roses and carnations, also the lath shade for variegated ficus in summer. The new rose house is 36x120, with three center benches each six feet wide and two side benches each three feet wide. The roses are in solid beds on the ground level, six inches of oyster shells being provided for drainage.

Another of the illustrations shows a ficus house 40x100 which is not seen at all in the general view. They had a fire in this house last winter and about half the stock was destroyed. The other view shows a house of decorative plants, 45x100. There is a large retail trade and a good stock of plants is carried for use in decorations.

Mr. Oelschig is a pretty regular attendant at the S. A. F. conventions and made an exhibit at Milwaukee last August. He studies northern methods and in so far as possible applies them to his own business. He has a son who is gaining knowledge of the various branches of the trade by working with northern concerns, having recently left Wittbold's, at Chicago, to go to J. M. Gasser, at Cleveland.

A NEW YORK DEPARTURE.

Manager Alfred Chasseaud, of Herald Square Exhibition Hall, where the big chrysanthemum show was held in New York in November, is arranging for a business display of Easter stock in the same place. It will be a departure which will be watched with interest, for the plan is such as to make the affair of direct concern to all in the New York market.

It is to be called the Easter Flower Fair and is to be held the two weeks preceding Easter. Mr. Chasseaud says: "This project appears to be what is sorely needed in the metropolis, a sales-room or market of ample size, where growers and dealers and the general public can meet in comfort day and night to do business."

The plan is to sell floor space to the various parties who have Easter stock to sell. The hall will be open day and evening and all night on Easter Saturday, giving every facility for handling either wholesale or retail trade. Admission will be free during the day, but an admission of 25 cents will be charged in the evening, when there will be music. Mr. Chasseaud says he has the cooperation of the largest growers and wholesalers in the country.

BOUVARDIAS.—As these useful flowering plants go out of flower reduce the supply of water gradually in order to assist in ripening the wood, as on this depends in great measure profuse flowering next year. The plants must still be kept in a house where some fire-heat is applied for the same reason. When all the foliage has fallen they may be stored under a stage in the greenhouse, where drip does not reach the roots.—Gardening World.

THIRTY RECOMMENDED MUMS.

Jessie Robbins asks me to give the average height, season of bloom, etc., of the varieties I noted in these columns a few weeks ago as exhibition kinds. I take pleasure in doing so for the benefit of the craft at large, as far as my own experience goes, but it must be remembered that the time of planting greatly affects the question of average height, as stock set out in May naturally grows taller than stock planted in June and plants set closely in the bench will draw up longer than plants given lots of room. The heights given are such as plants will attain with general cultivation for exhibition flowers.

The season of flowering is, of course, governed somewhat by the time that the bud is taken. Thus in the case of W. Duckham, flowers were cut October 10 from buds taken early in August, but the finest flowers were produced from buds taken about August 20, as the earlier flowers do not have the broad, massive petals that are the chief charm of this variety. Speaking in a general way, I would not like to try to grow exhibition flowers in a house that would not give me five to six feet of head room above the bench, and more would be better, as the loss from flowers damping is less when there is a good body of air circulating between the flowers and the glass. BRIAN BORU.

GERANIUMS FOR EASTER.

How shall I treat geraniums to have them in flower for Easter? I have several thousand in 2¼-inch pots. Can I take another cutting and be in time to have some good flowering plants for Easter?
W. A.

Plants now in 2¼-inch pots are rather small for Easter blooming; yet if you have the right house and temperature, you might get some 4-inch pot plants, with a truss or two of bloom. I will just mention here that for bedding plants, we propagate in September, shift into 3-inch as soon after New Year's as possible. About February 1 we take a cutting off every plant. The plants that have been stopped, break out with two or three shoots and make bushy plants.

As early in April as we can get the room and time, we shift into 4-inch.

test summers; while in wet, cool summers they grow too much to leaf, with little flower. You can not produce the ideal conditions under glass in the months of February or March, but you can approach it with good results.

CENTER PIECE AND STEVIA.

What would be best for the center of the dining table? The adiantum is entirely too tender. The plant should not be taller than six or eight inches.

What is the best way to bring stevia into bloom for Christmas? I cannot get it in time. The plants are large old ones. They have been planted in the open ground all summer and are now in pots in a house north and south, at 50 degrees at night.
SOUTHERN.

Adiantum cuneatum is very little used

Small growing pterises are among the most useful.

If it is Stevia serrata, or sweet stevia that is alluded to, then it is strange to hear of its not being in flower by Christmas, and I can only account for the same by the warm climate of Alabama keeping it growing, and there being no cool nights in September and October to arrest growth and develop flowers. In the north this useful flower kept as cool as we possibly can above freezing, is always in its best condition by the middle of December. I should think that in the warm climate of Alabama, this stevia would not be worth taking into the greenhouse. Planted in convenient sized beds and protected from frosts, by some cheap cloth, would be all you need.

THE READERS' CORNER.

ED. REVIEW:—On page 136 of the Christmas issue is a note headed "A Broken Gasket." Replying thereto I would ask the correspondent and the fraternity in general if they have ever heard of or tried Smooth-on compound, an iron cement for cracks in iron of any description. It is the most useful thing I ever heard tell of, and every florist should have it on hand, for it is inexpensive. It is made by the Smooth-on M'f'g Co., Jersey City, N. J., and was introduced to me by Henion & Hubbell, 65 N. Jefferson street, Chicago. For cracked elbows, split pipes or filling holes of any nature it is par excellence. It is a dry cement powder, finer than steel filings. A little mixed in water, to the consistency of putty, applied to the crack and allowed to set five or six hours will become as hard as the iron. There is also a paste used for filling the spaces between sections, when sectional boilers are connected, that would stop the leakage this correspondent speaks of.

NYMPHAEA PULCHERRIMA.

James Hudson, V. M. H., writes in the Journal of the Royal Horticultural Society (British) that by reason of its robust growth and excellent constitution he considers Nymphaea pulcherrima the best blue water lily, without exception, for outdoor cultivation in summer in warm positions or where the overflow water

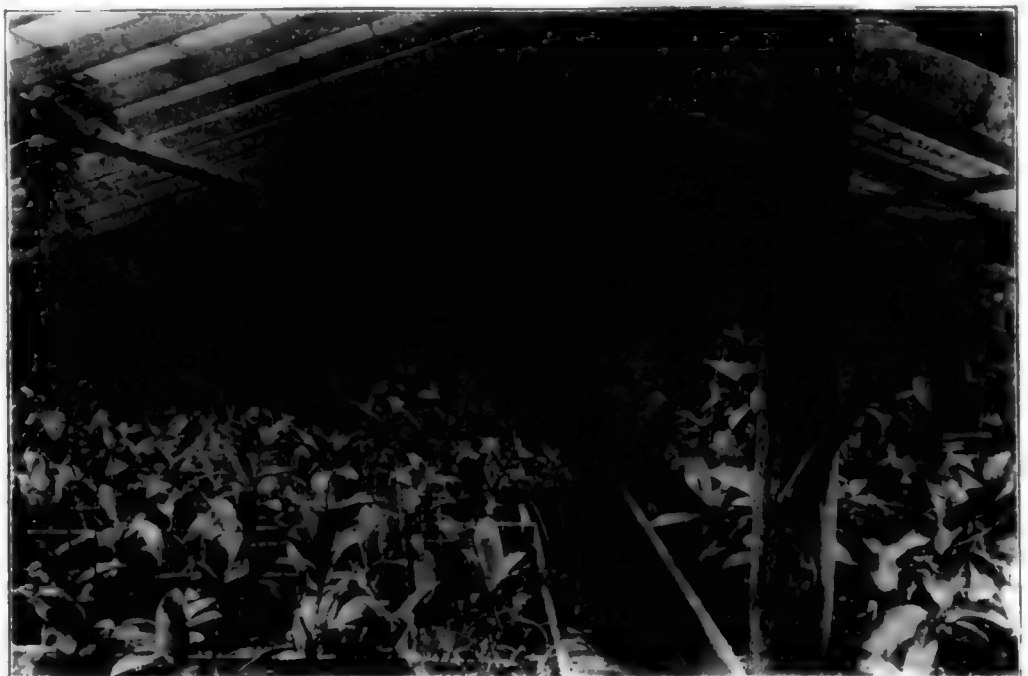

A View in the Store of E. Asmus & Co., Chicago.

These plants begin to bloom by the middle of May and are at their best, both for bloom and vigor, by the end of May or planting out time. We never try to give these geraniums over 45 degrees at night during the cold months, for you do not want anything like softness in a geranium that is not to be planted out until near the first of June.

Now to get some plants in flower by Easter, do not try to get a cutting; best just pinch out only the top of the growth, and if they are well rooted shift at once into 3 or 3½-inch; by the middle of February shift into 4½-inch. Use a rather stiff loam, with a fifth of well-rotted manure and pot firmly. With our bedding geraniums we use in our last shift about a pint of bone meal to one bushel of soil, and I think it helps the flowering. Avoid leaf mold or too much animal manure. You want flowers and not leaf growth.

All the above is on the right road, but you will not get flowers in April unless you have a very light house and can give them a high temperature. Give them the fullest light at all times and plenty of room between the plants. Fifty-five to 60 degrees at night will not hurt, if you are able to give them 70 to 75 degrees on all clear days during the daytime. Remember how grandly the beautiful zonale geraniums thrive and blossom in our flower beds, even in our hot-for fern dishes, except where it is for some special occasion, for one or two nights only. There is a great variety of other small ferns that are used for this purpose and which continue in good order for several weeks or even months, if sensibly and carefully managed. Many firms make a specialty of these small ferns.

from warm tanks can reach it. In color its flowers are a distinct blue, darker than in N. stellata, Berlin variety, which is the blue of the Neapolitan violet. The pedicels, or foot stalks, are stout and support the flowers about a foot above the water. The reverse of the sepals and the foot stalks, too, have dark lines upon them, making them quite distinct. It is an American hybrid and a most desirable variety. N. William Stone is another hybrid of American origin, the flowers a darker shade, suffused with purple, but possessing much the same features.

HADKINSON SUPERINTENDS.

In appointing Joseph H. Hadkinson superintendent of floriculture at the St. Louis World's Fair, the management showed its appreciation of the splendid work accomplished by Mr. Hadkinson on the seventy acres of land surrounding the palaces of agriculture and horticulture. When Mr. Hadkinson joined the World's Fair force he was made head gardener on the recommendation of Frederic W. Taylor, chief of the departments of agriculture and horticulture. Most of his domain was a field of barren yellow clay. In less than a year he has worked wonders. There is a six-acre rose garden that even last summer made a splendid show and gave but an earnest of the beauty it will present when the great fair opens.

All of the shrubbery installed by Mr. Hadkinson has prospered, and every flower bed has received his personal attention and profited by his practical knowledge. As superintendent of floriculture Mr. Hadkinson will be in charge of all the gardens and also of the flowers displayed in the conservatories which form a part of the palace of horticulture.

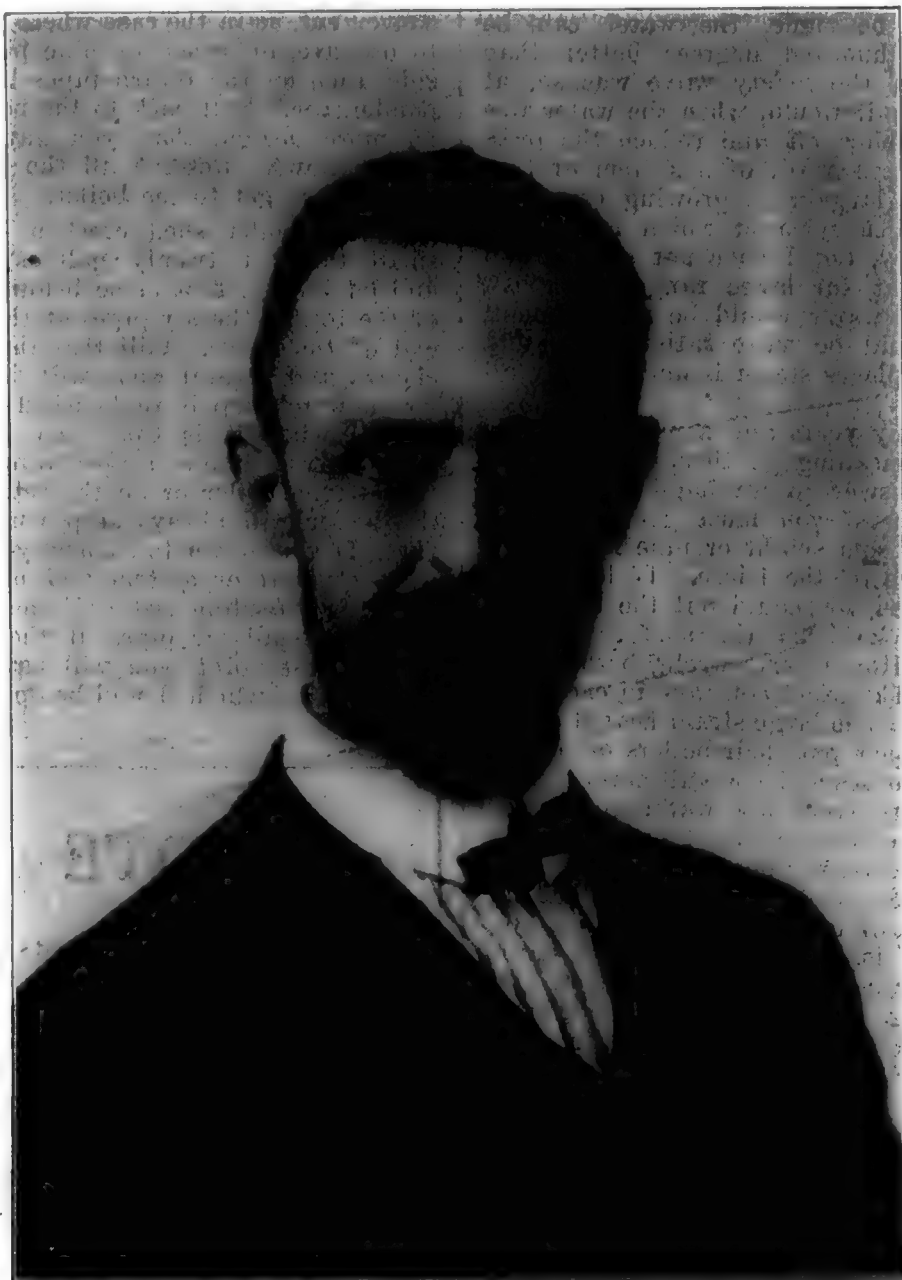

Mr. Hadkinson was born in Manchester, England. When a youth his parents emigrated to America and settled in Nebraska. He had studied in the botanical gardens in London, and in his new home he embarked in the nursery business. He gave that up to accept a position as instructor in horticulture in the University of Nebraska under Chief Taylor, who was then professor of agriculture at that institution. Mr. Hadkinson did the gardening at the Omaha exposition and had charge of Nebraska's horticulture exhibit at the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo. But at the World's Fair he has accomplished his greatest work.

GREENHOUSE HEATING.

The following is a paper written by Wm. Scott, of Buffalo, and read before the St. Louis Florists' Club at its meeting December 10. Mr. Scott's experience with hot water heating extends over forty-five years and he may fairly be said to have a thorough knowledge of the practical, every-day side of his subject:

Supposed improvements have been made in methods of greenhouse heating by hot water within the last twenty years, but actually after trying many different systems the writer can discover nothing new and no improvement on the plan and system used fifty years ago and which will be found most plainly and naturally explained in that splendid work, "Hood on Hot Water," published in London, England, some fifty years ago.

Remember that the circulation of water when heated in a so-called "boiler" is a natural law. It is the law of gravitation. The water in the return pipe being heavier, or, as scientists would say, of greater specific gravity, it presses down on the warm water in the boiler, which flows out at the flow pipe. So the greater the perpendicular drop in the return pipe, the faster will be the circulation. A perpendicular drop of six feet will do, but ten feet would be better. It should be needless to say that where the contrary exists and there is only a foot or so of fall in the return pipe, the circulation is slow and a great amount of fuel has to be burned. The faster the circulation the less time is there for the water in the heating pipes to get cool and the less fuel it takes to warm the water as it passes through the boiler.

Joseph H. Hadkinson.

(Superintendent of Floriculture, St. Louis World's Fair.)

Up to about twenty-five years ago nothing but the 4-inch cast iron pipe was used for heating greenhouses and Hitchings & Co., of New York, were pre-eminently the leading firm in that business, and scarcely any improvement on their system has yet occurred. Then some twenty years ago we began to hear of "overhead heating," "uphill plan," "down hill system," "hot water under pressure," "the use of small pipes," etc.

We will dismiss the overhead system by merely saying that it is utterly wrong in every particular. Any pipe higher on the walls than where the sash bar springs from is wasted. I do not say that pipes should necessarily be beneath a bench, for in carnation and rose growing I think it is of no benefit, rather a detriment, but they should be low enough on the side walls or paths to create a free circulation of heat among the plants. With soft-wooded plants in pots it is a great advantage to have the heating pipes beneath the benches.

The "down hill system," or that system in which the flow pipe rises to its highest point over the boiler and from there gradually drops through the heating pipes to the boiler, is wrong. You are diminishing your perpendicular drop at the boiler, which is your motive power. The "up hill system," if that means a rise of two feet in 100, and a corresponding drop in the returns, is also wrong, because the water at ninety feet from the boiler is cooler than where it enters the house, and has a tendency to weigh back on the warm water.

"Hot water under pressure" is not generally understood. I have a small system where the only vent for expansion is the city water main, which in our city is under a pressure of thirty-five pounds to the square inch. When the water expands with heat it must go back against this pressure. This works most admirably, there being two pet cocks at the two highest points of the system, to let out any air that may have accumulated there, but after the first week of firing we find no necessity of opening these pet cocks oftener than once a week.

Good as this system is, it is not hot water under pressure. As I understand the true pressure system, you fill the system and begin to fire; there is no expansion tank or relief of any kind except a safety valve. There being no space for steam to be made, the water can be heated a hundred degrees hotter than steam. If the safety valve was set at 300 pounds it would, when the water was that hot, blow off and reduce the pressure. I have heard of a system of that kind in a large rose growing establishment in Pennsylvania which is entirely satisfactory, but I have not seen it and believe that for large ranges of glass, where hot water would be inconvenient, steam would be more satisfactory, and for large places steam is undoubtedly all we want.

Not many years ago a most estimable and well meaning gentleman of Indiana said in answer to an inquiry that "if steam is used you must get the boiler down low, some eight or nine feet below the surface of the house. If hot water is used then you could put the boiler on the same level as the surface of the house." How utterly wrong both propositions! The exact contrary in each case is correct. The large steam heated establishments now put their boilers on a level with the houses and you will never get the best results from hot water circulation till your heater is at least seven feet below the heating pipes in the house. I said at the outset of this paper that the circulation of hot water is a natural law and so it is. You can improve steam systems or steam engines or cotton gins or threshers or mowers, but you cannot violate the law by which hot water circulates.

Now, as I have said what I believe is wrong about these innovations in hot water heating, it is about time I gave my views on what I think is correct, and I assure you, gentlemen, I have seen many systems installed and operated, some almost perfection, some working fairly well and some very badly.

Use no pipes less than 2-inch. Some years ago I reasoned that as a 4-inch pipe holds about sixteen times as much water as a 1-inch that had one-fourth its radiating surface, the advantage must be with the 1-inch. Nothing of the sort. What with friction and its too rapid cooling, nothing less than a 2-inch should ever be used in what we call the open system, and that is what 999 out of 1,000 of all our hot water systems are. The outlet and return pipe from and into the boiler should be at least fifty per cent of the capacity of the pipes in your heating system. To make this plainer, if you had in the houses eight 2-inch flows, then the flow from your boiler should not be less than a 5-inch. Rise perpendicularly if you can to the level of the flow pipes in the house; from there rise to the end of the house. Now here comes the most important point. Experts on heating say six inches in 100 feet. Why? It is wrong and I don't fear contradiction. If it was not that you wanted air to pass to the further end and as occasion may arise you want to draw off the water, then a perfect level in the house would be ideal, but two inches in 100 feet is all that you should give as a rise. There are automatic air valves made, but automatic contrivances are fine when they work and all wrong when they don't. So I prefer to tap into the highest point of the pipe or manifold a ½-inch lead or zinc pipe and run it up a rafter six or seven feet higher than the heating pipe. If there is any air in the pipes it will be at the highest point and always escape out of these small pipes.

If the flow and return pipes are of equal capacity it is well, but if that is not convenient, as in the case where you want to use five, or seven, or nine pipes on a side, then let the return pipes be in preponderance. Fall back to the boiler with no more decline than you gave incline to the flows. Reserve all the drop you can till you get to the boiler.

In the boiler shed erect a barrel or small tank of twenty gallons capacity and let it be a foot or so below the level of the top of the air pipes at the farther end of the house. Call that the feeding cistern and several ways will suggest to you how to keep it replenished and how to tell when it is full. An inch pipe leading from it and tapped into the bottom of the boiler or on the returns near the boiler will always keep your system full. If you prefer to connect your boiler with your water system and not bother with the "feeding cistern" then instead of those small air pipes at the farthest and highest point, you will have to put in pet cocks, which should be opened once in twenty-four hours to let out the air. The latter system I have and it works to perfection, but there is always danger of the fireman forgetting the air cocks.

I am aware that there are many twists and turns that have to be overcome in putting in a system and to go into that would fill a small book, and I have only tried to give my views of the broad and fundamental principles of hot water heating. Keep your boiler down low. Reserve your drop in the return pipe till you get to the boiler. Don't expect a 2-inch to feed two 2-inch; it takes a 3-inch to do that. Keep your pipes almost level in the house and don't use any pipes less than a 2-inch and you can't make much of a mistake. Always put in a boiler that is twenty-five per cent more powerful than your need and enough radiating surface for the most extreme weather and then on the ordinary winter weather you are saving much fuel.

THE LATE E. G. ASMUS.

Ernst G. Asmus, the well-known rose grower, died at his home at West Hoboken, N. J., on Thursday, December 17. The funeral services were held at Trinity Church, Hoboken, Sunday afternoon, interment being at New Durham.

Thus is the final chapter told in the career of one of the strongest men in American floriculture, for few there are among the craft who, from such small beginnings, by the sheer force of a clear head, indefatigable industry and consummate honesty, have accomplished so much in a mere material way or become so firmly seated in the regard of those with whom they have had business or personal relations. Mr. Asmus may well be upheld to the younger generation as an example of that quiet, undemonstrative, earnest, energetic, conservative element which is the mainstay of the business world.

Born at Hamburg, Germany, November 27, 1844, the family came to America when the boy was 8 years old and located near New York, in the vicinity which for half a century has been the scene of the uninterrupted development of this strong character. The father was a carpenter, but the whole family soon became engaged in the flower business at West Hoboken, where the initiative was taken by Ernst, then in his twelfth year. The first greenhouse was a lean-to; then they rented a place of three houses in fair shape for those days, but hardly recognizable as greenhouses if set beside the new plant recently built at Closter. For a time Rudolph Asmus, an uncle of E. G., was with them, but soon the business was in three separate hands. In 1880 Mr. Asmus bought out Peter Schupp, a veteran, at West Hoboken, and here the real development of his business began.

In early years Mr. Asmus grew pot plants; later he was known as an extensive bulb forcer, but of late his energies have been chiefly devoted to growing roses for the New York market. Carnations and valley have also been handled. He was a prime mover in the affairs of the New York Cut Flower Company and it was in its market that his stock has found its outlet. But perhaps Mr. Asmus will be best remembered through the length and breadth of the land as the disseminator and sponsor for the Liberty rose. Mme. Testout and President Carnot found their way to the American trade through his hands. Mr. Asmus was a member of the S. A. F., the American Rose Society and New York Florists' Club. The business will be continued by the sons, who for some time have had an active part in it and have already demonstrated that they have inherited many of their father's sterling traits.

TOLEDO, O.—Keller Bros. are repairing one of the greenhouses at Walbridge park and there are two other houses which must shortly be remodeled.

WASHINGTON, PA.—Warrick Bros., of 498 Locust avenue, have completed their new greenhouses for the growing of lettuce in a commercial way. The houses are five in number, each 15x120 feet, with a potting shed and boiler house on the east end, 12x70 feet. In addition to growing lettuce they will also grow cucumbers, parsley, cauliflower and egg plants for market.

NEW YORK.

With the Retailers.

If one may judge by the enormous quantities of blooming plants and the gorgeously brilliant windows of the retail stores, this is to be an old time Christmas, with enough and to spare for all. There seems to be a confidence and expectancy in the great floral centers as great as in other years and there can be no doubt as to this being the greatest plant Christmas on record. At this writing, Monday evening, the stores are ablaze with color and day and night the plantmen are delivering their finished work and the increased force is busy banking, arranging and preparing the stock for the grand display of Wednesday and Thursday, when the great retail stores of the metropolis will present to the admiring public an exhibition that pales any ordinary flower show into insignificance. No wonder the usual flower exhibition fails to draw crowds in New York when such a magnificent display is made every Christmas and Easter in our retail stores, the like of which is seen nowhere else in the country.

It would be difficult to particularize where all do so well. Red is the prevailing color, of course, and poinsettias, bells and holly are used lavishly everywhere. Some fine specimen azaleas are in evidence and this plant is used more extensively than ever before for Christmas. Gloire de Lorraine begonias are numerous and beautiful. All the growers have them this season. Ward's baskets of this plant are superb. Orange trees are everywhere and heather is exceptionally profuse and excellent in quality. So, too, is the holly; green, well berried and utilized as never before on the walls as a background for the blooming plants. Bells in all sizes and styles, and red ribbons galore, make the display a brilliant one. Then, to add to it all, come the novelties of the year and the left over novelties of the years that have gone. There are hampers of dark wood, grand pianos in purple and white, chariots of gold and trunks in green and purple, autos and imported vases and the new Russian and Pompeian designs in wood, exquisitely painted, made into baskets, jardinières and sleighs and very popular, all the best establishments using them.

Siebrecht & Son's "palace" opened on Monday, as determined upon a few months ago, an accomplishment that then seemed impossible. This firm is occupying all of the immense space on the ground floor of their building—three large stores—with Christmas goods of every kind. The lighting effects here are very brilliant. The entire store is enclosed by immense plate glass windows. The furnishing will entail an expenditure of nearly $10,000. It is without a doubt the finest floral establishment in the world.

Mrs. Scallen's new store in the Imperial Hotel, where her husband established the business twenty-three years ago, is complete and open for the Christmas trade. It is one of the handsomest shops in New York and has a splendid location.

President Traendly.

President Traendly, of the New York Florists' Club, was born in Brooklyn only thirty-six years ago. He comes naturally to the florist pasture, his father having conducted a flower business at Fulton street and Ft. Greene place for many years. At the age of sixteen he was in the service of Fred Donahue, on Fourteenth street, and later was one of the lieutenants with Thos. Young, Jr., at 11 West Twenty-seventh street. In June, 1893, he formed a partnership with Chas. Schenck, in the wholesale commission business at 38 West Twenty-eighth street, where they still hold the fort and are adding yearly to the volume of their business.

Mr. Traendly has been a member of the New York Florists' Club for over ten years and has always been an active worker, well deserving the honor which has been bestowed upon him. He has been a trustee and committeeman, often had much to do with the successful outings of the club and is a strenuous and enthusiastic bowler. His management of the canteen department has immortalized him and endeared him to his fellow members and he will make an excellent presiding officer, dignified, devoted and deliberate.

The Asmus Obsequies.

The funeral services over Ernst Asmus were held on Sunday afternoon at Trinity church, Hoboken, and a very large number of his friends in the trade were present to pay the last tribute of respect and affection to his memory. Representatives from many neighboring cities and towns and a large number from New York and Brooklyn attested to the universal regard felt for Mr. Asmus. Many beautiful floral tributes were sent to the bereaved family, that of the American Rose Society being singularly appropriate. An immense tablet made of Bride, Maid, Liberty, Golden Gate, Killarney and Franz Deegen roses surmounted a vase of American Beauties. Mr. Asmus was beloved by all who knew him intimately. His cheerful, happy personality made friends wherever he was known, and his success in his profession made his reputation national.

Various Items.

The stock of the supply houses is about depleted. Never has there been such a demand for holly and evergreens. Day and night the shipping has been in progress. The Christmas tree department is of especial interest. It is estimated that New York spends $2,000,000 this year for "green goods" and that half a million trees will be distributed within the confines of Greater New York. Prices for Christmas trees retail, range from 25 cents to $25 each. The usual rate paid by the florists is $50 per 100 bundles. Bundles contain from one to ten trees and vary in height from two to twenty-five feet. Mistletoe is plentiful and perfect this year. The imported is especially good and in demand.

The handsome conservatories in Bronx park escaped destruction last week in a terrific dynamite explosion that shattered the glass there and the windows in the botanical museum, 400 feet away. Fortunately no one was injured.

Henry Berger, of Irvington, N. Y., who has been gardener for Miss Helen Gould for over twenty years, met with a sad loss on Saturday, his daughter

Frank H. Traendly.

Susan being run over and killed by a train.

Desebrock & Co., the originators of the Russian jardinières, baskets and novelties, have entirely sold out their manufactured stock for the Christmas trade. Their work is a decided novelty and has been in great demand. Mr. Desebrock will shortly visit the large cities with samples of his handiwork. He has been a resident of New York for four years. His father, Gustav, of Hamburg, is the owner of two fine florist stores there and the oldest florist in that city.

Henry Hentz, Jr., of Madison, the grower of special Beauties, has wisely entered the ranks of the Benedicts and added an "American Beauty" to his collection last week, on account of which his brother florists extend congratulations.

C. W. Eberman, manager of the conservatories of Siegel Cooper Co., has built up a great business there during the past year and in a way that has antagonized none of the florists of New York. Prices are maintained at regular rates and only the best of stock is handled. Mr. Eberman managed the business for Dressel & Smutz for six years, when they had charge of these conservatories.

Rowehl & Granz, of Hicksville, L. I., have just sold their entire stock of 100,000 dahlia roots to Clucas & Boddington, who will in the future handle their entire output of dahlias and gladioli. Mr. Schepke, formerly with Bobbink & Atkins, is now one of the traveling salesmen for this house.

Geo. Lorenz, of Astoria, is very ill with typhoid pneumonia.

John Young handled some grand imported holly trees for Christmas. Many of the wholesalers indulged in a "plant flyer" this season and disposed of large quantities of ferns, also, as well as blooming stock and holly. Kurzman-Dacre Co., Young & Nugent, Thos. Young, Jr., Bradshaw & Hartman, Riedel & Spicer, Alex Guttman, James Hammond and Chas. Millang were all active in this respect and made fine displays in their windows. Mr. Millang predicts that plantmen will ultimately consign their stock to the wholesale men for sale, in the same way the cut flower growers have adopted. His new conservatory just completed covers the entire yard back of his wholesale store and he has handled an immense lot of plants for Christmas.

There were shoals of violet growers from up the Hudson in town on Monday. They came to feel the market and get a line on its capacity. Some predict an avalanche of violets for Christmas. Prices for specials in 100 lots and selected will rarely touch $2.50 unless all signs fail. Last year cut flowers of all kinds were higher on the corresponding days before Christmas. The past week was just about as predicted—exceedingly dull and depressed, the improvement being hardly noticeable on Monday.

Langjahr has received some fine cypripediums from Zeller, of Flatbush, that readily sold at 15 cents, which is top price for many a day. He thinks the new red carnation he is handling ought to go above $25 per hundred before the week is over.

The Long Island florists are suffering from thieving visitations, Louis Dupuy, of Whitestone, being the latest sufferer. It would seem wise for the Long Islanders to add to their assets a good dog, a bear trap and a seven-shooter as preliminary precautions before Christmas.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

A VISIT TO UTICA.

The writer was invited to go down to Utica and talk a little on carnations. How presumptuous to accept! Yet he did and if he told them nothing new he created a laugh and that's a mutual pleasure. Utica has about 60,000 people, mostly florists; at least when you are riding around the city you would think so. It has more florists' establishments to the square mile than any section of the country I know of, twice as many as our city, with a population at least six times as large. It is not Utica or its many surrounding small towns that use the product of these many establishments. Its roses, carnations and adiantum go to our big cities east and west. To see all or a third of these places was impossible and as it was 2 degrees below zero and eighteen inches of snow during my stay it was not so delightful to get around.

Utica will soon be known as a carnation center. There is Dr. W. A. Rowlands, with four up-to-date houses with nothing but carnations and among them one grand house of Lawson, fine Prosperity, a most well grown lot of Joost, and many of the newer sorts in smaller quantities. The Doctor has fairly got the fever and will continue to grow and expand.

W. P. Pfeifer has doubled his area of glass since I last saw him and the leading article is the divine flower, mostly well done. Wm. Mathews, besides his pets, the orchids, has five or six houses of carnations and here as elsewhere you see the incomparable Lawson superior to everything. At Frank Baker's all was hustle and bustle and I was glad to see the energetic young alderman doing such a fine business and having such a fine stock to do it with. He also has converted one of his places almost entirely into carnations.

Mr. Spencer, of Oneida street, has a house or two of carnations looking well, but what interested me mostly was a scarlet seedling of great promise now in its third year. It is of identical parentage with Flamingo and, I believe, with the expert handling of a Dailledouze, or Ward, or Hartshorne, susceptible of producing a prize-winning variety. If all the city places have enlarged and improved their carnation culture as the few I saw, then the "pent up" city will soon be a center.

You all know Peter Crowe and his now famous Adiantum Croweanum. Happy, rotund man, he has no care now but a dozen houses of this splendid fern, numbering, big and little, hundreds of thousands, and if the cut was ten times what it is, he could dispose of it. The variety or form of the fern is one thing, but how to grow it is another. If I could grow it with such freedom and luxuriance I would Crowe, too. The fifteen large modern rose houses are leased to Brant Bros., of New Jersey, and some great stuff is being produced. Bridesmaids with three and four-foot stems and flowers the size of a small Early York cabbage are plentiful.

And now I come to a delightful trip. C. A. Nicholson, one of Utica's most active business men, has a lovely home in the village of Trenton, some thirteen miles northwest of Utica. Here the surface of the earth begins to roll in pleasant hill and vale. And I suppose as you go north the more and more abrupt and higher the elevations become till you find yourself in the Adirondack mountains or the north woods of New York, where multi-millionaires have already gobbled up vast areas. No law against that and if they will preserve the forest and native game we should be thankful, for vandalism in the shape of the lumberman has laid desolate many a fair spot. How many beautiful spots are there in this region? Thousands, and only waiting for the crowded dweller of the city to take advantage of their natural beauty and make them an earthly paradise. When our state is as crowded as China, or Belgium, or England, we shall appreciate better the picturesque state we have.

Well, now, this Mr. Nicholson is a mighty fine gentleman and like all real, refined gentlemen from Adam down, or up, to McKinley, he loves a flower and so does one of his good sons and sure his daughters, too, and so he built in this beautiful rural retreat three houses each 20x200 and installed them with steam heat and every modern appliance and utility. Turn a button and every house is illuminated with electricity. A ram from a living spring sends water to a reservoir on top of a neighboring hill 200 feet above the greenhouses, so there is 100 pounds pressure. Every modern appliance is used and the utmost order and cleanliness prevail and a sight of the houses and their contents and their genial proprietor is worth a long journey, frozen noses and damp toesies.

" 'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore, and coming events cast their shadows before." Yet it takes but a small portion of prophetic lore to see in the very near future a great carnation growing establishment at Trenton and the firm will be as it is now: "Wa-no-Ka Greenhouses, H. H. Nicholson & Co., Aug. Grassel, Manager."

Gus, as he is familiarly known to many carnationists, has only been at Wa-no-Ka since last April. For years he was with Mr. Marquisee, of Syracuse, and watched with parental care the birth, early childhood traits and mature development of The Marquis, Flamingo and Albatross.

From end to end the place is a picture of care and good culture. Many varieties are grown, but some in only small quantities. A house of Lawson for evenness, quantity and quality is the best at this time of year I ever gazed on. Among whites The Queen outclassed them all, and that included the very latest aspirants. Cressbrook, after being thrown out by most of us, is here a magnificent thing, with stems like Lawson. Harry Fenn is a great crimson and the wonderful Enchantress is grown to perfection. Gus swears by Flamingo, and who knows it better than he? And Albatross he says is great. He knows because it has the blood of Wm. Scott. If you go to Utica go out to Wa-no-Ka and then go to Syracuse and see Flamingo in all its glory, as I did, and of which, Mr. Editor, I would like to say something about a week later. W. S.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Kring Bros. have an orange tree five feet high in their greenhouse bearing a crop of very large fruits.

PHILADELPHIA.The Market.

The milder weather that marked the close of last and beginning of this week has greatly increased the quantity of flowers for Christmas, and also, let us hope, the number of shoppers. Indications point to a heavy business, at prices lower than last season on several lines of stock, notably fancy Beauties and small tea roses. Some good shipping orders have gone out, but the local stores are ordering cautiously, feeling that they can secure what they need at short notice.

An Honest Count.

I am very much opposed to the system of reducing the size of bunches of certain varieties of flowers during the busy season. Instead of advancing the price fewer flowers are put in the bunch and the same price is asked. This would not be tolerated with carnations and should not be with bouvardia, lilac or asparagus. The buyer does not sell these in bunches, but divides them, and the grower does himself and his profession harm by bunching eighteen or nineteen sprays of any of the above varieties and sending them into the market. If sold as one and one-half dozen no harm could be done, but the bunches are bought and sold as twenty-five. Make your bunches twenty-five, or twelve if you prefer, so a glance shows what they are and get full value and stop the deception.

Glencoe.

Nearly all my friends, especially among the retailers, want to know how I can take such a hopeful view of business. Some put this question in words, some in looks, some in actions. To all I want to tell the story of Glencoe.

Glencoe is a magnificent horse, a hunter of exceptional ability. He was bought, some years ago, for $1,000, by a young man burdened with an enormous income and who had no idea of the value of money. Naturally this young man soon had more experience and less money. Last week his stables were sold at auction. Among his horses was Glencoe, worth, conservative judges said, about $600, but three bidders wanted Glencoe and he brought something over $1,200.

Now, don't you think there will be a little money around to spend on flowers after all?

Calendars for 1904 are coming in. The prettiest received so far is a beautiful, naturally arranged cluster of flowers with bloom, buds and foliage all exquisitely colored. There are two sheets, one with pink the other with yellow roses in the center of the cluster. Each sheet is for six months of the year. This calendar is presented by Leo Niessen.

C. Eisele, of Eleventh and Jefferson streets, has sold his corner property for $7,000. He has moved to his old location next door.

The following clipping may prove of interest: A novel reason for damages was alleged by Mrs. Annie H. Sturzebecker in court against the Inland Traction Company and the Philadelphia & Lehigh Traction Company. Mrs. Sturzebecker is a florist and her greenhouses are in Upper Gwynedd. The vibration of the heavy trolley cars, she alleges, breaks the glasses in her greenhouse, and the velocity of the cars causes a lowering of the temperature in the plant-growing houses, to the great detriment of floriculture. It is claimed that business fell off $100 last year, and that this is also chargeable to the trolley companies.

Hope you have a good Christmas and will have a prosperous New Year.

ST. LOUIS.The Market.

The cut flower trade during the past week was very good, especially so with funeral work, nearly every florist being busy all week with this kind of work. This made a big call for white flowers, with colored stock going begging. Roses have been plentiful and indications are that there will be a full supply for the holiday trade, in all varieties and of good quality. Bride, Maid and Meteor are most plentiful at present. American Beauties are selling well, with fancy stock somewhat scarce at $10 per dozen. Fair stock with medium stem is the best seller at from $3 to $6 per dozen; shorts at $2. Ivory, Gate, Perle and Carnot are not so plentiful and of these the market will be short for Christmas. Carnations are in fair crop for the present demand and with good prospects for a big supply for the Christmas trade. At present the price is $4 per 100 for common stock, with from $5 to $8 for fancy. Enchantress is meeting with a big demand and so are Lawson and Wolcott. The wholesalers have orders booked ahead for all they can get for Christmas. Violets brought $1 all last week, but today the price is up to $2, and $3 will be asked for Christmas. These are in fine supply and of the best quality. Bulb stock promises to be plentiful; that is, in Romans, Paper Whites and valley, with the price on these from $4 to $5 per 100.

Everything looks bright at this writing (Monday) for a good Christmas trade, and from reports quite a number of orders have already been placed for cut flowers and many plants are seen labeled "sold." Among the plants that are offered for Christmas and which are most salable are Gloire de Lorraine begonias, cyclamens and poinsettias. A few fine azaleas are also seen. All of these are meeting with ready sale. Dwarf oranges and Jerusalem cherries are also well thought of.

Sales of holiday greens are more than satisfactory. One of the features of the trade is the short supply of bouquet green. With the price advancing almost every day and not so many fakirs out with wreaths, the demand for holly is big, as the quality this year is very fine, with plenty of berries. Mistletoe is unusually fine this year. Fine bunches are seen in all the stores, with a big demand.

Various Notes.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held on Thursday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 2 o'clock. This meeting will be a very important one for the members. All chairmen of committees are requested to be present for instruction as to what is expected of them when the executive committee of the S. A. F. meets here in March.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Herzog are reported very sick at their home near Gratiot station. From last reports they were still under the doctor's care.

Mrs. H. G. Berning is reported dangerously ill from an operation performed the past week. Henry has the sympathy of the trade.

C. C. Sanders had to do jury duty the past week, which is not very pleasant these busy days. Mr. Sanders reports a good trade in nursery stock this fall.

The Society of Naturalists, of which Prof. William Trelease, of Shaw's Garden, is president, will meet here next week and St. Louis will be honored with distinguished representatives of this society. Prominent and successful investigators make up this and the Botanical Society, which was organized ten years ago for the promotion of research in all branches of botany. Prof. C. R. Barnes, of Chicago, is president of the Botanical Society, and Dr. D. T. McDougal, of New York, is secretary. The Central Botanists' Association and the Fern Chapter is also a chapter of this society. B. D. Gilbert, of Clayville, N. Y., is president of the Fern Chapter, and H. D. House, of the New York Botanical Garden, is secretary. One of the features of this meeting will be a banquet at the Mercantile Club on the evening of Dec. 30. The visitors will also be shown over the grounds of the World's Fair.

The florist bowlers will begin a series of games for prizes after New Year's, and every Monday night until the convention in August the bowlers will be found at the Blue Ribbon alleys. The ladies bowl every Wednesday afternoon and the juniors every Tuesday night at the same alleys.

CHICAGO.The Market.

Writing on Wednesday at the height of the Christmas activity, there is only one point on which the wholesalers agree: They all say it is a very satisfactory week, as to the aggregate of sales, but from that point reports diverge. One house is short on long Beauties; another has them to spare, but can't get the first mentioned to buy. Some are short on good roses; others have enough for all orders. One house has double violets by the thousands; another has wired its growers for more. Even on the carnation proposition there is a difference of report. Carnations are scarce, yes, but one house closed up Tuesday night with at least 10,000 on hand, and several others had plenty, simply because the buyers could not use them at the prices asked. Receipts on Tuesday were larger than had been expected, and again on Wednesday arrivals were heavy. While many shipping orders have gone out only partially filled, it begins to look as if it would take a considerable recession from quoted rates to move the lower grades, particularly whites, and once more the grower who stored his stock stands in a position where he may be sorry. When prices are held too firmly wholesalers will not buy of each other, for there is no commission in it and the possibilities of loss are too great. Yet, after all the recent cry, the growers expect 5 and 6 cents for their carnations.

One of the notable things has been the call for Liberty roses. Every order has required more or less and calls for from 200 to 500 select eat up the available supplies very fast. There has been some very fine stock about, well worth the 25 cents asked, but there have also been quantities which bore the marks of extreme old age. In general it may be said that roses sold better than last year because the average price was a little lower, that carnations sold slower because the prices were higher and that bulb stock went well because everyday prices prevailed.

Various Notes.

The Chicago Florists' Club will hold a series of meetings in the various sections of the city, north, south and west, between January 1 and February 17, the exact dates and locations to be announced later. All persons in any way engaged in the trade are requested to be present, especially employees who are not members of the club.

At the last club meeting W. N. Rudd invited the craft to "picnic" at his place on Friday, December 18, and many accepted, but only a small party showed up at the appointed hour. Those who absented themselves missed a very pleasant afternoon. Phyllis, Mr. Rudd's new light pink, was, of course, a center of interest, for the variety always shows up strong. He has a large planting of an unnamed white seedling of 1898 which came in for general approval. It has never been staged at a flower show, and it may not be an exhibition variety, but it looks to be a first-class money maker. There is a red, with an exaggerated stem that may be exhibited next year. Mr. Rudd says White Lawson is in every way better than the parent and certainly the plants on his place bear out his statement.

The $50 premium money donated by Peter Reinberg and Wietor Bros., for last week's Florists' Club show, was distributed as follows: $20 to Garfield Park Floral Co., $10 to J. A. Peterson, $5 to W. L. Palinsky, $5 to Kalous Bros., $10 to Chicago Carnation Co., each of whom had a meritorious exhibit.

One well-known carnation grower, although not a large one, says he finds it profitable to put a union label on every carnation bud as soon as it shows color. The little rubber band effectually prevents the calyx from bursting, does not retard development and is quickly cut off when bunching the flowers.

John Reitmeyer has a range of seven houses at St. Louis and Foster avenues, all devoted to carnations and doing well. His Enchantress are particularly good. Randall handles his cut. Mr. Reitmeyer was one of the first greenhouse builders north of town, but has given up contracting altogether.

J. F. Klimmer says that from 5,000 carnation plants, his cut lately has been 700 a week, where in October and early November he got twice as many.

A handsome Christmas present came to John Steinmetz, one of the travelers for W. W. Barnard & Co., in the shape of a nine-pound son, arriving December 21.

Harry Rowe has the decoration at Rector's for New Year's eve.

Klehm's Nursery was in with a very big cut of Liberty for Christmas.

The stockholders in the Flower Growers' market will hold their annual meeting January 2.

Mrs. Stollery comes down each morning with a nice lot of plants, including peppers, azaleas, poinsettias and bulb stock in pans.

The secretary of state at Springfield has licensed the incorporation of the Chicago Florists' Bowling Club. It is stated that the application was made by two members and others without authority from the club.

OUR FLORISTS' CLUBS.

In a recent issue of the Gardeners' Magazine, London, William Falconer, of Pittsburg, writes in part as follows:

"In most all of the big cities of the United States the florists and gardeners have what are known as florists' clubs, one in each city. The club meets once a month and discusses timely horticultural topics. These clubs, when properly handled, do much good; they bring the members into close acquaintance, and all become familiar with the newest and best varieties of plants to grow, and the best paying and most progressive methods of cultivation and construction, etc. These clubs are not beneficiary societies in any way.

"As I have for several years been president of The Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club, I will tell you something about what we do, and this may be suggestive in inducing you to go and do likewise. We hire a small hall one night a month. Our annual dues are $2 a year, just enough to pay our expenses. We meet at night from 8 to 10, but it is often 11 before we get through, and our meetings are well attended, bright and interesting. Routine business is brief, and long discussions are disallowed. A special subject, as the rose, carnation, palms, house decorations or the like, is taken up for consideration and discussion at each meeting; it is announced at the previous meeting, and all come prepared to handle it, and a special exhibition of the subject is made. For instance, if it be roses, the several growers of roses send in a few of their choicest flowers, and a letter of request is sent out to the uttermost ends of the country to the raisers of new varieties or growers of special kinds for exhibits of their roses and a few notes about them. This brings together a most instructive display. No papers are prepared or read. A busy gardener or florist has no time to prepare a paper; besides, the very thought of having to prepare and read a paper would scare some of our very best growers clean out of our club. But the most diffident cultivator will answer questions as fast as you ply them at him.

"The president takes the chair and gets through the routine business as quick as possible. Now we come to the subject of the evening, viz., Roses. The standard sorts are taken first, and one variety at a time is placed on his table. These American Beauties were grown by John Smith. John is asked the condition of his crop, when he planted them, how far apart, how deep the soil, the composition of his soil, about temperature, ventilation, training or tying, second crop, mildew, red spider, fertilizers, etc., and John will answer each question pointedly and promptly. Then the chairman will ask other growers pointed questions as regards their experience and practice, and there will be an explanation of differences in treatment or marketing or cropping. There is no hesitation or dullness; sometimes three or four men try to speak at once. The Beauties are passed and removed, and on to the table come Meteors, and after them Brides, Testouts, and so on, each one in its turn.

Then come the new varieties, and the way they are torn to pieces sometimes makes one sorry they ever appeared. But it is a critical audience and an honest one.

"For each month we select a seasonable topic and all of our local daily newspapers report these meetings, and they also are noted in our horticultural or florist papers. And once a year, in the summer-time, we have an outdoor picnic."

Vegetable Forcing.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Radishes, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches. Lettuce, head, 30 to 50 cents tub. Cucumbers, 50 to 60c dozen.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.—Duncan Rhind & Son grow grapes and vegetables as well as roses and carnations. They also have a large stock and fruit farm.

THE English horticultural journals are taking favorable notice of the pure culture method of making mushroom spawn practiced by Paul Swanson, Chicago. The French growers have had good results by this method, and the English papers have frequently advocated its trial in that country.

FUNGUS IN LETTUCE.

If it were not for the attacks of fungus, the growing of lettuce under glass would in most cases be an easy matter, but as it is, it requires constant care and watching to ward off, or keep the diseases in check. Much trouble may be avoided by keeping the plants in as healthy a condition as possible, as a healthy plant is not nearly as susceptible to the attack of any disease as a plant of weakened vitality. But as a healthy man is not immune from contagion, no more is a healthy plant immune from a fungous disease if the spores of fungi are brought in contact with it and the atmospheric and other conditions are suitable to the development of the fungus.

The first step toward the prevention of the trouble is to see that the house gets a thorough cleaning before cropping is begun, so that no spores will be left hanging around. No decayed material or rubbish of any kind should be left under the benches. All old soil should be taken out and the benches given a thorough washing with hot lime, or a spraying with copper sulphate solution before the new soil is put in.

It is short-sighted policy to try to raise a crop from old soil rather than go to the trouble and expense of putting in fresh material. The old soil may look all right and one might think that the addition of fertilizers would renew its worn-out qualities, but the chief danger is from its having been subjected to the influence of summer weather and having become more or less dry and powdery, after which condition fungus is almost certain to develop as soon as water is applied. If any one wants to prove this let him apply water to soil that has been severely dried, and he will be surprised to see how quickly the soil will become covered with minute fungus. Let him sow small seeds in it, and he will find that no sooner are the seedlings over ground than they begin to damp off. This damping off, as it is commonly called, is the work of a fungus.

From my own experience and observations I am satisfied that the cause of most of these fungous diseases can be traced to the soil, and the experiments of others in sterilizing, etc., have proved that when the soil is perfectly free from the spores of fungus, with suitable conditions for the crop under cultivation and ordinary care, these diseases seldom make their appearance. Atmospheric conditions have more to do with their development than their origin. Overhead watering and drip are often blamed for certain diseases, but condensation from a close and humid atmosphere is more suitable to their development. I am never afraid to water such tender subjects as lettuce overhead on bright days when I am satisfied that the foliage will be dry before time for shutting up the house. The spores of fungi certainly require moisture to develop, but being minute bodies have little chance of remaining on the foliage when water is being applied in any quantity, whereas when the foliage is merely moist, as it would be from condensation, it affords excellent conditions for their lodgment and development.

The whole lettuce plant is edible and any disease attacking its leaves, though not killing it outright, will render it unfit for market, while diseases in other plants, such as tomatoes and cucumbers, can be checked by spraying with fungicides. Hence the necessity for proper conditions and treatment and the exercise of every possible means of prevention for the successful growing of the crop.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Business in all lines has been almost at a standstill, but as the cut of flowers has been very light, nothing has gone to waste, and as every grower in this vicinity seems to be off crop, prices hold up to previous quotations. It is almost impossible to get a quotation on carnations, with a promise to fill the order. There will be quite a few mums offered this week and prices will be good on them. Paper Whites and Romans are coming in more freely, and will help out on funeral work.

Notes.

Frank Riley is back again with Smith & Fetters, having left E. J. Bolanz, of Akron, when the new partnership of Bolanz & Best was formed. Mr. Best is one of our Cleveland boys, and we are pleased to learn that he has left Chicago and is getting nearer home, and wish him every success in Akron. E.

THE COMMISSION MAN.

Says a well-known English writer in the Gardeners' Chronicle: "I am aware that there are many country growers who send their goods to Covent Garden to be sold on commission, and in many instances it is when the supply much exceeds the demand that these extra consignments reach the commission men, and when returns are made the senders are surprised at their smallness; but, as one of the large commission men explained to me the other morning, they are obliged to look after those first who send every day through the year, and though consignments from casual senders may be good, they of necessity get left over until all the best trade is supplied. The commission-man's position is not altogether a pleasant one, for though he may conduct his business on the strictest and most careful lines, he finds it impossible to satisfy all concerned. Yet I am sure that the grumblers would not do better if they acted as their own salesmen."

LOSS OF VIGOR IN PLANTS.

In discussing the loss of vigor in plants through propagation by cuttings, A. Hemsley writes:

"I think there is little doubt that some species of plants deteriorate with age. I will take carnations as the first example. While many varieties will retain their vigor for an almost indefinite time, others only last for a comparatively short period. The yellow varieties appear to me to lose some of their vitality sooner than any others. I remember when first handling Pride of Penshurst that I propagated several thousands, and they all made bushy, healthy plants—in fact, I never knew any variety of carnation to do better; yet the following season I could not succeed so well, and year by year the stock got worse, until I had to give it up altogether; but before doing so I obtained a stock from another grower. I had a similar experience with Andalusia, a winter-flowering carnation, a great favorite twenty years ago, which is hardly ever seen now. Some other varieties have also dropped out of cultivation, but there are none better to take their places. My experience was gained in establishments where plants were grown for sale, and it may be that owing to the strongest and best plants always being sold, and cuttings and layers from weak plants were made use of, the stock deteriorated more quickly than it otherwise would have done.

"I will now take Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which has always proved abortive; in fact, it rarely produces female flowers; and this variety, instead of deteriorating, appears to gain in strength from year to year. There seems little doubt that all plants which fail to mature seeds may be propagated from cuttings and a healthy stock kept up for a much longer period than can be done with such plants as seed freely; and yet it is possible to grow many of the seed-bearing plants for an indefinite period without ill effects being apparent. I have often referred to the necessity of propagating from strong, healthy stock and I have noticed that with some species a long time is required to make good plants from weak cuttings, and in some instances it is impossible to do so. Take Erica hyemalis, a species which must have been in cultivation for at least half a century; it has always been raised from cuttings, and as grown at the present time it is more robust than it was twenty-five years ago; and the same may be said of other ericas. I will refer to one other subject, viz., Asparagus plumosus. I have found that all seedlings will grow vigorously if potted on as they require it, and otherwise treated liberally; but grown in poor soil and after being divided several times the growth gradually becomes weaker, till at last the variety "nanus" is evolved. It is much the same with Aralia Veitchii and A. gra- cillima, which are usually cultivated in light, peaty soil; but potted in rich loam and afforded good treatment they grow quite out of character. It is not difficult to get these into the vigorous growth, but it takes some time ere the plants get back to the thin graceful habit.

"There is one more point I may refer to, viz., the propagation of plants which produce terminal inflorescences, such as Euphorbia pulcherrima (Poinsettia), the plants raised from early cuttings of which grow at the least three feet in height before they come into flower; but the tops may be taken off and rooted, and if treated properly, large heads of bracts may be obtained on stems not more than nine inches or a foot high. There are other plants which may be treated similarly, but it would not be safe to trust to these late propagated plants for the next season's stock. There is much more in the choice of stock plants and in the selection of suitable cuttings than is generally supposed."—Gardeners' Chronicle.

THE HAIL ASSOCIATION.

The Florists' Hail Association of America has been organized over sixteen years, during which time the members of the association have paid thirteen assessments, including the one paid upon joining. The association is a purely mutual organization, in which the members place in the hands of the treasurer one advanced assessment in order that losses may be paid promptly. The present membership numbers over 1,200 located in nearly every state in the Union and in Canada. Over nineteen million square feet of glass is now insured. Over $65,000 paid to members, representing 740 losses, is the record for the past sixteen years. John G. Esler, Saddle River, N. J., is secretary.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardening World.

FORCING LILACS.—Like most hardy plants and shrubs, the lilac resents hard forcing; a temperature of 50 or 55 degrees will be ample for the first fortnight after housing; afterwards a rise of a few degrees by sun heat may be accorded. Those who have lofty structures may lift one or two large bushes that have been transplanted during the last year or two, taking care to retain a good ball of soil to them. It is not absolutely necessary to pot these; they may be stood upon the floor and the roots covered with old potting or other soil. Abundance of tepid water both at the roots and overhead is essential until the blossoms begin to open, when the overhead syringing should cease. Excellent varieties for the purpose are Charles X, single, Madame Lemoine, Virginité, and Leon Lemoine, double.

AKEBIA LOBATA.—The leaves of this climber consist of three leaflets and the fruit of an ornamental character, being three inches to four inches long, and purple in color. It belongs to the barberry family, and comes from Japan. A plant was recently fruited in a Nottinghamshire garden. The better known A. quinata does not often fruit, although it flowers freely enough, both under glass and on an outside wall.

FRANKFORT, IND.—Emil Knabe has bought the greenhouses of Mrs. Elizabeth Kuntz, in which he has been employed several years.

PETRIFIED CALLA BULBS.

A day or two ago I sent you what we thought was a petrified calla bulb. Some time ago our men were digging open a trench where there was a steam pipe buried for several years and one of them unearthed this specimen. When the pipe was first put in it might have gotten in with the filling material. It happened to be buried mostly in gravel. Can you make anything else out of it?

A. F. J. BAUR.

The petrified "something" has arrived. But why, Mr. Editor, do you send it to a simple gardener? I am not a geologist. I wish I were. The state geologist would be the proper person to determine whether this was the petrified corm of a Richardia Aethiopica or merely a fragment of some marine plant or crustacea that lived and died in the early ages of our planet, so distant in the remote past that, like space and eternity, the mind cannot grasp it. Without calling yourself a geologist or even admitting that you have a smattering of that glorious science, the truths of which have so enlightened and expanded our knowledge of the earth's past history, yet it is the duty of all intelligent men to acquaint themselves with the great and broad truths of the science, and how many intelligent men can say that such marvelous revelations do not interest them is beyond understanding. There are millions of smart men troubling themselves about hazy traditions, fictions and ghost stories in connection with man's comparatively brief occupancy of this terrestrial sphere that are not the least interested in the fact that it took two millions of years to form the coal measures alone, or that perhaps another million years the face of the earth was covered with reptiles or kindred monsters, the remains of which are now found in immense quantities in our states of Wyoming and Montana.

Creatures with bodies seventy-five feet long and a spread of wings 100 feet across once flew over the city of London. What a nice birdie to settle on the roof of a greenhouse! But there were no greenhouses then, no man in his most primitive form, perhaps no true mammal or warm blooded animal, no flowering plant or fruit bearing tree. How easy to be led off into the wonders of the past, so I will pull up merely to say that accepting the nebular system and then following through the inorganic rocks up through the carboniferous and through successive ages to the tertiary, it is not difficult for any of us to realize the stupendous age of the earth, as well as by the remains of former life in these past ages to see the gradual development from the minutest denizen of the ancient seas up through the shell fish, crustacea, fish, reptile, bird, mammal and, last of all, the crowning work of the Creator, biped man, and later, much later, a man with a conscience.

John Fisk, professor of history, philosophy and several other things at Harvard, one of America's greatest men, who died three or four years ago, in his beautiful little book, Through Nature to God, which every soul who can should read, says, "Man has without doubt existed on this earth a million years in his present physical form but in a low mental form." He then adds that there is every evidence that man was on the earth during and survived the glacial period.

Some bigoted or wilfully blind persons may ask how John Fisk knows all this? From the vestiges that man has left behind him, and great minds have made a life study of prehistoric man, and surely they are a better authority on such a subject than the great divines of the past, present or future. The divines have a different sphere of usefulness and when they antagonize the revelations of science they always receive a "solar plexus," but they recover from the blow and what they deny in this generation they admit to be the indisputable truth in the next.

In the little farm in Genesee county, N. Y., where the writer tries to grow our staple flowers, the land has here and there a large granite boulder; perhaps a few rods farther on is a great slab of limestone. Both the granite and limestone must be countless ages older than the soil or sub-soil, or anything you can dig up for fifty feet beneath the surface. These granite boulders and limestone chunks were carried by the glacier from hundreds, perhaps thousands, of miles north and in its movement south, as it slowly melted, it dropped here and there pieces of rock that it had scraped off and carried along from northern lands. In New England and some parts of fertile Ontario you will see the boulders so thick you can jump from one to another for a mile or more. This must have been where a glacier took a long rest and deposited its rocky increment.

One day a few years ago one of the men who was working on the land brought me two fossil horns, or what he thought were horns of some ancient short-horn cattle. They tapered from the base, where they had grown on the skull, and had the rings and were indeed very like petrified horns, but they were nothing of the sort. My learned friend, Prof. Cowell, who is a geologist, said they were the remains of some mollusc and had come to where they were found in the limestone deposited in the glacial period. Now the petrified article of Mr. Baur's is almost identical in appearance to a piece of those "horns." It is possible that it may be the corm of a calla and the action of the gravel has produced petrification, and I am going to submit this curious specimen to the same learned authority and let you know and apologize for this long yarn, but being indoors with a desperate tight chest, I have nothing else to do.

W. S.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The Crawford store and greenhouses, owned by Charles Cooper, have been disposed of at public auction. There were seven greenhouses 20x100 and three hotbeds 8x100, also machinery and two and one-half acres of land.

The Christmas trade is very heavy this year and all the stores are doing a nice business. There is a shortage of carnations, especially white, which bring $3.50 to $4 per 100 wholesale. L. D.

WINONA, MINN.—Mrs. D. Voelker, of the Huff Street greenhouses has let her place freeze up, as the high price of coal and sickness in the family did not warrant keeping them going. Ed. Kirchner will tear down five of his houses in the spring and replace them with seven of the Dietsch short-span houses.

The Market.

This market is quiet at this writing, but it is the lull before the storm. There is very little stock at any of the wholesale houses, but I do not doubt but that if you were to visit the cellars at the various greenhouses you could find an abundance of nearly everything. Taken in all branches business is better than last week, but is still nothing to brag about. Carnations are shorter than ever, if possible. Roses are in fair supply. Harrisii lilies, also callas, are coming in and meet with ready sale. Violets are scarce and many more could be sold. Valley and narcissi are in good form. A few short and medium chrysanthemums now and then are quickly snatched up by the retailers, as white flowers are scarce. Smilax is in over-supply at present, but Asparagus Sprengeri, plumosus and adiantum are not equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

J. A. Peterson has returned from his trip through the east and reports the demand for his specialties as being very good. His son, Rodger, is also on the road and has been sending in some nice orders.

Sherman Thomas, of Fort Thomas, Ky., suffered a loss through fire which destroyed a propagating house and one greenhouse.

A visit to Richmond and New Castle during the past week was very interesting in showing the various florists rounding things into shape for the holiday rush. At Richmond the B. K. & B. Floral Co., the E. G. Hill Co., G. R. Gause and E. T. Grave were visited. The B. K. & B. Floral Co.'s carnations were by far the best that I saw, but Chas. Knopf, the manager, was in dire distress owing to the failure of his water supply. The new roses at the E. G. Hill plant are a sight worth going far to see. John F. Lemon is in the best of health, but still finds the warmth of the house more to his liking than outdoors.

At New Castle, Heller Bros. are right in it with a large crop of long-stemmed Beauties, but short ones are scarce. They also have a good crop of tea roses on. Reinberg & Weiland are cutting some fine Brides and Maids. L. A. Jennings had the best roses I ever saw at that place.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

At the time of writing Christmas orders are coming in fine shape, and evidently the volume of trade will be in excess of last year. The supply of roses is good and quality excellent. Beauties are fine and cannot be said to be scarce, but the orders exceed the supply. Carnations are fine and a fair cut, but these also will be short of the demand. The demand for pot plants, such as azaleas, cyclamen, lilies, primroses and poinsettias is brisk and prices good. Green goods of all kinds are plenty and command ready sales.

At the Dunkley establishment M. F. Kyle has a fine batch of poinsettias, which are in great demand.

The Van Bochove's have a very fine cut of Beauties and other roses. Their carnations have also given a fine cut, but apparently there will be a shortage on this item. They have just put into commission a handsome new delivery wagon, which is a real work of art.

John Meints (De bloemen kweeker) has been setting them up for the boys. He is rejoicing over the home-coming of a twelve pound boy.

Seed Trade News.AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THERE is also a shortage of asparagus seed.

WM. HENRY MAULE, Philadelphia, has been mailing 1904 catalogues since the middle of December.

THE rear guard of the California travelers finds a belated journey more advantageous this year than for some time.

THE only thing that seekers of cucumber seed ask is a reasonable assurance that the seed offered them has not more than six kinds in it.

VISITED PHILADELPHIA.—James B. Kidd, representing the Cox Seed Co., San Francisco. S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn., president of the American Seed Trade Association.

EGG PLANT seed will be one of the items that will give bother to the seedsmen who sell to market gardeners. The supply of dependable stock of egg plant seed is exceedingly short.

THE retail catalogues that are long in coming out will have the best chance of having right prices in them. The early ones, however, will likely have the first chance to refuse to fill orders.

ROCKY FORD, COL.—D. V. Burrell says he was able to fill all contract orders on summer squash, with a small surplus. He grew this seed himself. Mr. Burrell grew between 600 and 700 acres of cucumbers.

CONTRACT, or advance orders, on a pro rata crop basis, were never, in a general way, filled shorter than they are being filled this year. There are, of course, exceptions, which apply mostly to California crops.

CANNERS are paying $8.50 to $10 for sweet corn, and cucumber seed goes for $2. Retail prices for sweet corn are sure to be higher than was ever known in the trade, and the same will apply to cucumber seed.

WORD comes from St. Louis that the American Seed Trade Association will hold its twenty-second annual convention in the World's Fair city June 21 and 22, and that headquarters have been secured at the Forest Park University Hotel.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—W. H. Small & Co. report: "The seed trade at Evansville just now is dull. The clover seed situation is in rather a peculiar shape, as the country that usually buys a great deal of this seed this year has raised quite a quantity of it, although the quality is very irregular. Also a great deal of territory in Illinois, which previously has not had any seed, apparently this year has a great deal, hence we are not very sure that the present high prices are safe. The trade in alfalfa in this territory has increased wonderfully in the last two or three years, a great many people having had good success in raising it, and the demand this year appears to be even more urgent than it has been before."

THE only 1904 catalogue thus far received quotes most of the varieties of sweet corn at $8 per bushel. It contains, however, a slip stating that the prices were printed before the actual shortages were known and that values are now higher.

BAYARD HENRY, receiver for D. Landreth & Sons, states that the purchasers of a part of assets are Burnet Landreth, Jr., and S. Phillips Landreth, sons of Burnet Landreth, senior member of the insolvent firm. The purchasers had no interest in the old firm except as employees. The receiver states that the purchase money was advanced by friends and was no part of the bankrupts' estate.

ROCKY FORD, COL.—There are over 1,000 truckers here who grow more or less seed and the vine seed crops of the valley this year were over 2,000 acres, not considering the Rocky Ford cantaloupes. Many truckers grew cucumbers for market and after shipping saved the seed from the balance of the crop. Some of this seed coming on the market has caused more or less recrimination because of suspicions of the non-observance of contracts.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

All the establishments stocked up for a big Christmas business. H. E. Phillpot has a nice lot of cyclamen and Chinese primroses, also bulbous stock in pans, which is also a good seller. He had a lot of chrysanthemums in pots for the holiday trade. His cut flowers were largely shipped in from the south. Mr. Phillpot is a progressive florist and always makes a trip east each year to see what is going on in the trade and to buy stock.

At Alston's begonias, cinerarias and primroses are leaders. There is a good sale on palms and ferns. Chrysanthemums are a specialty here.

At the Fort Rouge place cyclamens are greatly in evidence, also marguerites. Carnations and mums are in good shape for holiday trade.

James Birch, on Notre Dame avenue, has a very fine stock, including peppers, azaleas and begonias, also well-grown decorative plants. He is doing a big business in holly, etc., and carries a large stock of song birds.

Stock in Good Shape.

Denver's cut flower market will be better supplied this Christmas than at any previous stage in its history and the same might be said of its plant department. Never in the writer's memory has he seen such good material at this time of the year, and all growers, as well as dealers, are looking for a good holiday trade. Beauties and violets may be rather short, although Mauff's big addition to his plant, as well as the Hall and Glauber crops, will supply a large addition to what has been cut heretofore. Maler & Denkworth and the old reliable, A. Schenkel, are our only successful violet growers here and will be pretty well supplied with stock. Many of our carnation growers were late in getting their plants housed and consequently their main crop is now good. Peterson, of Barnam, who devotes all his establishment to carnation culture, has been exceptionally late this year. Did angling for the speckled beauties last August have something to do with it.

Ben Boldt's Poinsettias.

The old Mud Lake greenhouses, at Harris, which have had many ups and downs since they were first started, some twelve years ago by Haycox & Huddard, and now owned by the Daniels & Fisher department store, have been completely renovated and I might say, resurrected, under the able management of Ben Boldt. Ben's friends here are numerous and this, along with his being a good entertainer and his stock worth seeing, takes many of the Denver fraternity out to Harris. Poinsettias, roses and carnations are in the highest state of perfection. In fact such poinsettias were never before seen in Denver, although Ben has before now produced some good ones at another establishment. His mode of propagating is quite new in Denver, and probably so in other parts of the country, and may be worth referring to here. The original stock was received last spring in a dormant condition from California. This he placed on a gentle bottom heat. Some of the canes produced from these stumps were big enough to look through and far too big for the boys to make pop guns from. This first growth, as most growers know, is rather difficult to propagate, but the second crop of cuttings are the ones that have produced such large specimens as are now seen, bracts fully as large as those seen around Los Angeles and far more durable. The wood propagated in August, although not as tall, produced bracts fully as big, some measuring twenty-three inches across and eighteen inches high in 5-inch pots, very rich in color and foliage. The old stumps were utilized for bush plants and are far more decorative and natural in appearance than the flat, made-up pans. Those in 10-inch pans, carrying about twelve bracts of varying size and height of stem, make novel specimens. I would like to learn how extensively the California stock has been used and if the results are good. The late propagation from this stock makes better stuff for 8-inch pans, as they produce much larger bracts and healthy foliage.

The Best Carnations.

The carnations and roses are in the highest state of cultivation. Chatenay is very good here and seems to be an easy rose to grow. Norway and White Cloud are the white carnations grown here, and Enchantress, as elsewhere around Denver, has been very satisfactory. I measured several which went four inches. This carnation has proven a good keeper under various treatments and can be utilized in so many kinds of floral work that it is considered the best all around variety that has visited the Rockies. Lawson, which is as productive as ever, has deteriorated in size out here, but Mauff is growing some very good flowers. Davis Bros. confine nearly all their establishment to this variety and have all their crop looking very good. Adonis is considered the best red out here and Harlowarden the best crimson. The latter is fine in stem and form and Benson thinks it superior to the other crimsons in color. Of the older whites, Wolcott is holding its popularity and Crane is taking a back seat, especially at the Park Floral Company's, where a new seedling of Mr. Valentine's has superseded it, clearer in color, larger and far more productive.

several have enlarged their facilities. J.

The FLORISTS' MANUAL
by WILLIAM SCOTTIs a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review), and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopedia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It isA Complete Reference Book for Commercial Floristsand is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.—The new set of W. Wells & Co., Surrey, includes a yellow sport from Miss E. Fulton; Dora Stevens, rosy cerise; J. H. Doyle, the gold medalist of Melbourne, Australia; Mers-tham Red, Merstham Yellow, Mrs. H. A.
Allen, a deep, rich, rosy pink, similar to
Mme. Carnot, on a four-foot stem; Mrs.
W. Duckham, Mrs. Barnard Haulsey and Miss Alice Dighton, the two incurved which received first-class certificates at the National Chrysanthemum Society's Show; Yellow Petit Amie, Red Barkley and the yellow Ivy Stark.NEPHROLEPIS WESTONL.—This is a very pretty crested variety of N. ensifolia.
The type is remarkable for the thick, leathery substance of its fronds; the variety partakes of this quality, and should make a useful market fern. At first sight it somewhat resembles N. davalli-oides furcans, but the branching crests from each pinnule are shorter, and all the fronds on the plants shown were fertile, while in N. davallioides furcans it is rarely that fertile fronds are produced. The symmetrical habit and good substance of the fronds should insure its becoming a useful market fern, and the award of merit was well deserved.THE RUBUS.—Rubus reflexus (or mo-lucanus), which was one of the plantsof the year at Ghent this spring, is grown largely at the famous establishment of
M. Truffaut, at Versailles, France, and is making its way steadily into public favor.BEGONIAS.—Perhaps no changes in plant form are more remarkable than those that have been effected in begonias.
Two novelties in the fancy foliage section are His Majesty and Our Queen, the result of reciprocal crosses of B. Rex and B. laciniata. The leaf has much the shape of laciniata, but the markings are very distinct and novel. The merits of both were recognized by the floral committee of the Royal Horticultural Society.ROSES.—M. Balliff describes Zephyrine Drouhin as being remarkably hardy, being cultivated at high elevations among the Alps and Jura mountains; and he also notes that it is a thornless variety.
The foliage is subpersistent, and the variety strong-growing, floriferous, and an excellent climber. Its pretty and scented blossoms are semi-double, of a tender rose color, and open in succession from May to late autumn. This rose does well as a bush, or as a climber on trellises and walls. It is easily grown from cuttings of the ripened wood.CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.—McKerr & Hawley have five houses of good stock, principally roses and carnations, and are doing a nice business.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

HYDROCYANIC GAS.—E. F. Hawes, head gardener to the Royal Botanic Society, writes: "A number of experiments are now being conducted in the glass-houses and gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park, with a view to thoroughly test the value of hydrocyanic acid gas for the destruction of insect pests on plants. The gas is used as a fumigant. Although it is too early yet to arrive at a general conclusion, or to make recommendations, it seems certain that with proper care hydrocyanic acid gas is safe and effective. Its action on mealy bug is all that can be desired, and the plants themselves do not suffer. When the gas is more easily obtained, and better understood, I feel quite sure it will be adopted by all growers for the destruction of insect pests. Other materials are also being experimented with, and from the same point of view, and there is every reason to assume that ere long some useful remedies will be placed in the hands of cultivators."

CACTUS DAHLIA DAINTY.—Cactus Dahlia Dainty, which obtained a first-class certificate from the National Dahlia Society, and also an award of merit from the Royal Horticultural Society, on September 15 last, very nearly approaches the ideal we have repeatedly held up in connection with the cactus section. It is of good form, attractive color, and has stiff, wiry stems that hold the blooms erect and clear of the foliage without artificial assistance. The flowers are not of the largest size, but this can in no way be regarded as a fault. The color is, for the most part, a pleasing shade of rose, but the central segments are heavily shaded with old gold, as also are the bases of the outer segments, this bright glow of color, combined with the bright rose, giving the flower a charming and dainty appearance. This new variety is one raised by Hobbies, Ltd., of Dereham, Norfolk.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS. — C. Harman Payne writes: "Although I have for some years past had correspondents in almost every country in Europe where chrysanthemums are grown, yet until this week I never had one in Spain. It is interesting to find that even in that country the gorgeous golden flower from the far east is likely to make a foothold. An English gentleman, writing to me from one of the northern towns, is desirous of knowing the rules upon which cut blooms are judged. He rightly says that he presumes something besides size is required to gain a prize."

CHRYSANTHEMUMS. — No Japanese chrysanthemums has stood out so conspicuously good in the leading exhibits during the present chrysanthemum season as the yellow, graceful F. S. Vallis. Mrs. Mileham has run it close, perhaps, but M. Calvat's seedling named after the enthusiastic and highly successful young grower of Bromham, Chippenham, has been first favorite. Although of large size, this variety is exquisitely beautiful, the long, drooping florets making up a deep and refined flower of great attractiveness.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres. F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Senger, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

At Rochester, N. Y., Greene's Nursery Company has been incorporated by Charles A. Greene, Jennie C. Greene and R. E. Burleigh.

CHARLES H. WOODRUFF, of Niles, Mich., died Dec. 13, aged 77 years. He was the originator of the Ann Arbor, Woodruff and Nina grapes.

E. RUNYAN, president of the Elizabeth Nursery Company, is interested in the promotion of the Cuba and United States Fruit, Nursery and Mercantile Company.

FRANK S. MERRELL, nurseryman, of Verona, N. Y., died December 18, of a complication of Bright's disease and heart trouble. He was 71 years of age.

BROWN BROS. Co., Pelham, Ont., have asked the courts to enjoin A. E. Coon from entering on a strip of land which they contend is included in a lease made with Coon.

THE horticulturist of the State of Washington has record of 230,822 fruit trees planted there this fall, many thousands having been set in counties not heretofore counted as adapted to fruit growing.

WESTERN WHOLESALE MEET.

Representative nurserymen from Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Iowa and Alabama have been in session at Kansas City. It was the annual meeting of the Western Association of Wholesale Nurserymen. Owing to the absence of A. L. Brooke, of Topeka, the president, the sessions were presided over by the vice president, R. H. Blair, of Kansas City. The secretary is E. J. Holman, of Leavenworth. Aside from a discussion of matters intimately connected with trade affairs, there was a list of addresses on general topics. A. Willis, of Ottawa, Kan., urged the necessity of the association forming a fund to punish dishonest dealers and salesmen, and presented feasible plans as to how it can be done. Other papers presented were from J. Brown, of Geneva, Neb.; E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; F. N. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.; J. H. Skinner, Topeka, Kan.; J. W. Schuette, St. Louis. Favorable comment was expressed by the delegates that farmers are devoting more attention to fruit culture, and are reaping the benefits from the good prices brought for apples, peaches and plums. There is also a growing demand for western fruit trees in the coast country, and the number of exclusive fruit growers is increasing.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—Wm. F. Gale has filed a petition in bankruptcy, liabilities $961.22, no assets.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.—A. J. Baur, who was formerly with Wm. Clark, has returned to the east to take the management of the Baur Floral Co., successor to S. Alfred Baur, Erie, Pa.

PLANT NOTES.

Camellias.

The camellia is hardy in California and thrives well in most locations except in our warm interior valleys. For many years the plants sold by local dealers were imported either from the eastern nurseries or from Europe. In the last fifteen years we have received many thousands of the native Japanese camellias and some of them are very fine, and when properly handled make a very satisfactory garden plant. We used to think that the plant liked a shady place and matured its flowers better when sheltered in the neighborhood of some wall or building, but experience has proven that they succeed fully as well in the open if the drainage is good and they are given an abundance of water in the summer time.

The single camellias seed very freely and there is no trouble in raising plants for grafting or in arching and strong stock is easily propagated in this way. They can also be grown from cuttings, but are not very quick in rooting and it takes fully four years before a salable plant is the result. In Japan camellias are propagated both by cuttings and grafting and the climate being exactly suited to their requirements they make a plant large enough to sell in much shorter time than they do here. When they are grown in pots they make a short, stubby growth and when grown in the open ground the growth is ranker and with less flower buds.

The old white variety Alba Plena is still the finest of its color and succeeds better under glass—that is, the flowers come more perfect than they do outside. This is true of all the white varieties, but of the other colors there is no advantage in growing any of them in a greenhouse. One of the best points of this beautiful shrub is the fact that its flowering season begins about the middle of November and extends throughout the entire winter and a portion of the spring, or until the warm weather in April starts the young shoots growing and then we have a mass of bright glossy leaves all through the summer and fall.

Regarding the merits of the different flowers I must say the European varieties are superior to the Japanese. Although some of the latter are very fine, and I have seen many different shades, I have not found anything to equal such sorts as Alba Plena, Mrs. Abby Wilder, Daniel Webster or Sarah Frost. The Japanese are very fond of single varieties and some of the colors are very beautiful, but they are not as much in demand here as any of the double sorts.

Where a camellia is planted in the ground and does well its growth is remarkably rapid. We have a tree in San Francisco over twenty feet in height, and in Sacramento, Cal., there are many specimen plants from ten to fifteen feet high. During their flowering season these trees are a beautiful sight and the wonder and admiration of our eastern visitors. Several hundred perfect flowers are to be counted at any time and when there is a great scarcity of garden flowers, as is customary in the winter time, the camellia becomes our most valued garden shrub.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had considerable rain during the past week, but the weather is not cold; in fact, we have had only three frosty nights thus far this season, and it is now almost Christmas. Business is quiet in all the stores, and there is little doing except funeral work. We all expect a big Christmas trade, but whether it comes up to expectations or not I will be more able to tell you later on. Carnations, owing to the warm weather, are still very plentiful, of good quality and very cheap. The best of the fancy varieties are selling wholesale at from 35 to 50 cents per dozen. Lawson, Crocker, Estelle, Cressbrook, Flora Hill, Bradt and almost all the other good kinds are selling at from 25 to 30 cents per dozen, and Portia, Scott and Joost at 20 to 25 cents. This is really no higher than they have been for the last two months, and fully 25 per cent cheaper than they were last year at this time. Should the weather get colder prices may stiffen somewhat, but it is very evident there will be no shortage of carnations this year. With roses it is somewhat different. I have visited not less than a half dozen of our largest growers during the past week and with most of them there seems to be a great scarcity of first-class stock. Several have large houses devoted to American Beauties, and they are generally off crop. Brides, Maids and Testout are fairly plentiful, but fancy stock of these varieties is scarce. Several growers are sending in large quantities of small, weak-stemmed flowers, but there is little demand for them at any price. Beauties are selling wholesale today at from $1.50 to $3 per dozen, Brides and Maids at from 50 to 75 cents, Testout, Liberty and Kaiserin at the same price and Pres. Carnot at 75 cents to $1. Chrysanthemums are still in evidence, but they are getting scarcer and of poorer quality. Some Mrs. Jerome Jones and Bonnaffon grown under glass and very good flowers are selling wholesale at from $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Outdoor flowers can be had at from $1.50 per hundred up to $3 or $4. A couple of weeks more will finish them all.

The regular monthly meeting of the California State Floral Association took place on Friday afternoon last. Mrs. J. L. Martin was in the chair. It was decided to hold the annual spring flower show in the Ferry building March 24 to 26. It will be entirely devoted to a display of bulbous plants.

P. McDonell, of Alden, was married to Miss McNamara, of Oakland, last week. Mr. McDonell is a well-known carnation grower and his bride was formerly in the florist business.

Sievers & Boland deserve much credit for their show of cut flowers and blooming plants. They not only handle the finest stock to be had, but their window arrangements are the most artistic in town. G.

TORONTO.

The Market.

At the time of writing prospects for Christmas supply of cut flowers look more promising than they did when my notes were written last week. Although the weather has been cold, we have been favored with a few bright days. Violets will be scarce, without any doubt, but other stock looks to be coming in fair supply. I mentioned last week the unprecedented demand for Christmas bells this year. This demand has continued, if not increased, and this week most retailers are sold out and many duplicate orders have been refused by the wholesale men. Holly and wreathing has had a run which far surpassed the expectations of the importers and consequences are that most wholesalers are out of stock. Baskets and other supplies of a decorative nature have had a good sale. Quite a quantity of southern smilax has been imported this year and from the present demand looks as though there would be more used than ever. Flowering plants, such as azaleas, are in considerable quantity. D. J.

LANCASTER, O.—W. E. Gravett, of this city, and Miss Louisa Rippman, of Circleville, were married Dec. 8.

This will be sure to become a standard commercial variety on account of its fine color, good form, size, stem and floriferousness. Nothing we have ever had on our place could touch it in blooming. Every shoot a flower stem and never off crop. Stands a foot above Lawson throughout the season and is easy to manage. The color is much brighter than Joost but not so dark as Lawson in the dark days of winter. It keeps its bright color.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Business is opening up in pretty good shape and if it increases as the week progresses we shall be satisfied. There are whisperings and mutterings here and there that business in the large department stores is not up to expectations. We know there has been a serious check to the wonderful prosperity of the past two or three years, but it will hardly affect our little business. In bad times our business is the last to feel it and the slowest to recover, but I don't want to be pessimistic and during the holidays to come I expect to see everything salable go and at a good price. Holly is plentiful, but ground pine is not to be had and of course, as it is very scarce, it is in great demand.

Our Main street florists are showing windows that are gorgeous in color. Nothing like it. "Wash all you got and hang out all your wash," is a most excellent business motto and I daresay was understood in ancient Pompeii as now.

Various Notes.

The weather has let up in severity, but it never was cold compared to a taste of central New York recently experienced in the city where Flamingo soars supreme. Remarks made by Mr. Marquisee on Friday last froze in my ears and not till I was in a warm car of the N. Y. C. did I get their full meaning.

Miss Rachel Rebstock is finely equipped to do business. Besides Mr. Peek in her employ, she has now the artistic assistance of Mr. Schnell, late of Thorley's, later of Palmer's and now late of Butte, Montana.

Governor Odell was the guest of the Chamber of Commerce on Saturday evening and sat down with 300 of our city's leading spirits. Flowers were not lavishly used. Miniature holly trees in prettily decorated jars were the feature and very appropriate, too. You will all be so busy counting the proceeds of Christmas business that any more Buffalo notes will be wasted. W. S.

I HAVE dropped other papers in preference for the REVIEW.—C. C. WONNE-MANN, Mexico, Mo.

FLAMINGO

The finest scarlet carnation ever introduced. Brilliant color; large, fine flower; fragrant; great keeper; long, stiff stems; early, free, continuous and ideal in habit.

ALBATROSS

The whitest of the whites. Early, will produce fine flowers in the field. A constant bloomer, never produces a weak stem, strongly clove scented. A most extraordinary keeper, a business carnation, a money-maker.

SUNBIRD

The strongest, most vigorous and most prolific of the yellows. Beautiful form, large flower, stiff stems, as free as any variety, is universally admired and sells readily.

The Market.

Business last week was similar to previous years; the week before Christmas was a dull one. Roses arrived in large quantities and some of the stock was not fit for sale, it had such a soft and unhealthy appearance. Maids and Brides were sold at very low prices. Carnations are very scarce; in fact, have been so since November. The stock which is offered is fine. Sweet peas, mignonette and cut baby primroses are very plentiful and sell well. Smilax is slow sale.

Store Decorations.

Randolph & McClements had a beautiful window decoration of poinsettias; they also displayed many new designs in fancy baskets, etc. Mrs. E. A. Williams' pretty down-town store has taken on its Christmas attire; in fact, it is a dream. Mr. Shieff, manager, reports business fine. Breitenstein & Flemm are displaying many new and unique novelties in boxwood and immortelle work. Geddis & Blind have a very striking window display of red bells at their new store. L. I. Neff is selling quantities of boxwood and immortelle wreaths. Mr. Neff has one of the oldest down-town cut flower establishments in Pittsburg. Thomas M. Ulam has one of the prettiest windows in Pittsburg, of red bells and poinsettias.

Various Items.

G. & J. W. Ludwig made up an arm chair last week for a funeral, for which they will receive $150. Their work was well executed.

E. C. Ludwig reports business fine and has more advance orders for Christmas than last year. Ernest will open up a new store in the Allegheny Diamond, April 1.

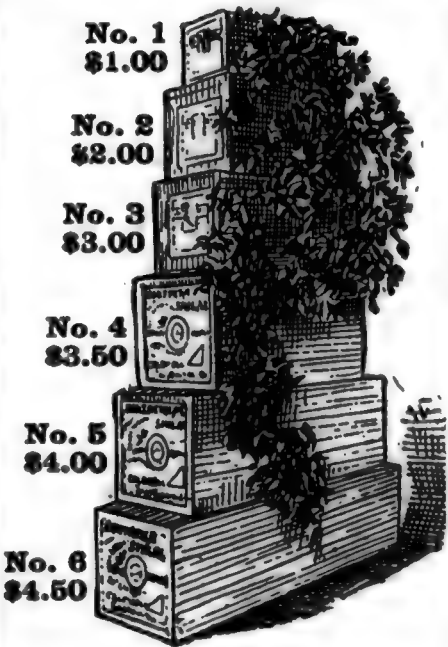

Several losses by frost were reported last week. W. R. Maebius had a wagon-load of decorative plants frozen; loss $60. H. L. Blind & Bros. also received a shipment of azaleas which came by freight and was frozen beyond recovery.

David Geddis is receiving congratulations on a fine baby boy. Mrs. Geddis and son are doing well.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

The near approach of the holiday season, a steady demand for funeral flowers, activity in social circles and an increasing country business have contributed to the betterment of trade conditions. The store men have prepared for a big Christmas trade.

At Swanson's window a holly arch four feet in height and seven in width, flanked by Pieroni ferns, adds attractiveness to the Lorraine begonias, azaleas and poinsettias in the foreground. May's windows have been gay with color during the week, potted plants, cut blooms and baskets being the prominent features. Holm & Olson have also had attractive windows. These tasty windows are the best kind of advertising, and if backed up by good goods, delivered on time, are sure to win trade.

Various Items.

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the N. W. Manufacturers' Association, under whose auspices and management the recent flower show was held, have paid all premiums in full and report the show a success financially. This cheering news will be hailed with delight by all in the trade and presages a larger and more successful show another year.

The growers have a fair crop for Christmas. Roses and carnations will be fairly plentiful. There will also be a good supply of bulbous stock, poinsettias, azaleas, cyclamens, etc. The only notable shortage is violets. While the plants are clean, vigorous and healthy, they do not bloom. This seems to be the general complaint with all the growers.

Bouquet green is very scarce, but holly is plentiful and good. Commission men are offering it at a low figure, as usual, but a good quality article sells readily at $5 per case. Mistletoe is especially fine this season. Pepper berries are seen in some of the stores and are very attractive. X. Y. Z.

TOLEDO, O.—Mrs. E. Suder says business is good but there is a great scarcity of carnations.

MISSOULA, MONT.—The Missoula Nursery Company will put up two more greenhouses in the early spring.

Novelties In Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bratt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

A RETROSPECT AND THE PROSPECT

A Retrospect.

Standing with the Old Year full of days behind us and at the threshold of the New Year, it is fitting that a summing up shall be made of the year that is gone, a trial-balance drawn from which we may see the net results of what has been accomplished and may gain some notion of where our course should lie in the season for which preparation must soon be under way, for in this day and generation the successful one is he who can see farthest into the future.

The Flood Tide.

A year ago our trade stood at the flood tide of its prosperity. Indeed, so stood all the legitimate producing industries of the entire country, and there were but summer-day clouds in the business sky. The cut flower growers, and their department had developed to be undoubtedly the most extensive branch of our business, were cutting splendid crops in the first quarter of 1903. Not only was production large in quantity but quality was excellent; painstaking study of plant growing was reaping its reward. Prices, too, were good and, while figures are obtainable from only the leading markets, it is probably no more than a statement of fact that from New Year's to Easter the aggregate money value of cut flower crops throughout the United States was never greater. At Easter the lilies, because of quantities of indifferent quality, did not do as well as had been expected. Decoration day is gaining a position second only to Christmas and Easter in the cut flower business.

The growers of flowering plants did a prodigious business for Easter and for the first time since the growth of this branch of the trade became pronounced fully met the needs of retailers in the principal cities. The bedding plantmen had a splendid season, well-grown stock of all kinds finding a ready outlet at satisfactory prices, save in a few scattered localities, and had these surpluses been recognized in season there was a place at no great distance for each of them.

The Fern Market.

The trade in palms and other decorative plants has been steady. The Boston fern was, in the growing season, produced in even greater quantities than before and the market was over-burdened in the fall; indeed, stocks are still pressing, but the Boston has lost none of its popularity through omnipresence; the plants will all find a home by spring. Another item which is suffering in price by increased production is asparagus, and this applies not only to plants but to the cut stock. The Pierson fern has taken a firm hold on the trade in its first season and the golden pandanus has been widely distributed.

Builders Have Busy Season.

During the summer the greenhouse builders had a busy season. There is this difference in the establishments of the Atlantic coast and of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys; on the one there are many hundreds of moderate-sized and generally very successful places, in the other comparatively few, but many of them very large producers, this spring standing at the close of their most profitable season. Is it any wonder that in the east each grower built a house or two and that in the west whole new ranges were the rule? The man was the exception who did not in some particular enlarge his facilities for doing business.

Yet the summer was a period of incipient hesitancy in the business world. Cost of production was very high and labor troubles were tripping many industries. The bellows from Wall street served to intimidate many merchants and manufacturers, for contagious as is the spirit of push, nothing runs riot through the body politic like the fear of famine.

Autumn Promises Well.

Starting the season with greenhouses never in better shape, with carnation plants coming in from a splendid outcomes, the smaller are the sums taken for each square foot of glass. However true this may be, it does not account for the shortage in crops this fall, for the small places and the large have about the same story to tell. So, too, do reports agree as to results under the many styles of construction; only the most careful grower has had always the best results.

Trade Hails.

Trade has halted perceptibly this fall, but the country at large has not felt the change as have the principal cities, where the microbe of pessimism seems to have inoculated, here and there, a grower who was thought immune. As witness the following from a leading producer for the Philadelphia market: "I never like to carry my mouth in a sling," he writes, "but without any joking, things are serious. Crops have been light and what we have had has brought but little; it needs one's entire attention to keep one's expenses down and to make the most of it." Of course this comes from a man who, when he does a thing, never does it by halves.

The chrysanthemum growers did not fare as well as usual, partly for the reason that the warm weather in many sections brought on the bulk of the crop before outdoor flowers were out of the way and in the season of the first cut of roses and carnations. Some splendid novelties were shown at the autumn exhibitions and, despite low prices for commercial stock, it may be said to have been a wonderful season for the queen of autumn. The violet industry is in door growing season, with roses showing the benefit of the increasing skill of the growers, it bade fair to be, in the producing end, at least, the most successful season on record. But from some inscrutable source has come a curtailment of production as unexpected as was the slackening in demand. The lack of results has, in some districts been most noticeable in carnations, but there has also been, in many districts, a failure to get the rose crops which one might have anticipated from early conditions.

It has often been said, apparently with some justice, that generally the larger a greenhouse establishment bea way to sympathize with any one who complains of low prices. In the west Campbell predominates and quality has been poor. In the eastern district Marie Louise is grown, but the best of stock has not fetched old-time prices.

New York Hardest Hit.

New York has suffered more than any other market, for in New York Wall street is the artery through which goes out much of the money to the veins by which it reaches the flower grower, but as the grower is, after the consumer, the foundation stone of our trade structure, so is the farm the source of our national prosperity, and however disastrous to those immediately concerned may be the fall of the financial high wire walkers, yet it can have no far-reaching effect in the face of abundant crops. Chicago is more interested in the movements of the walking delegate of the teamsters' union than in the gyrations of the stock brokers. Pittsburg, the center of the steel industry, about which so much derogatory has been said, has been one of the best markets this season.

Great Crops the Panacea.

In the great west business has scarcely felt the stock value shrinkage, which ten years ago would have caused a financial panic. Seven years of big crops has put the western farmer out of debt and given him money in the bank. On October 9 the banks of the state of Kansas had in deposits over ninety-eight million dollars, over $60 for every man, woman and child in the state. This was before any considerable part of a wheat crop worth sixty millions had reached market and while a corn crop worth even more was standing still untouched in the fields. All the other western states are as strong financially. While not all had Kansas' crop of wheat (the total crop for the year was near eight hundred million bushels), nearly all had corn, and corn is really king in the west. With these great crops the west has money to buy manufactures of the east, both the east and the west pay freight to the railroads and the railroads pay dividends to the wealthy patrons of the fashionable metropolitan florists. With more money in the country, per capita, than this or any other nation ever had Novelties are to be commended for attention. Chatenay rose has been a boon to at least two western growers. Sunrise has also served for several. La Detroit will be widely distributed this spring and the man who gets a good red will win a fortune, for both Meteor and Liberty are unsatisfactory.

Changing Trade Conditions.

Confidence is such that much money will go into buildings again this season. Many large cut flower producers will add more glass, believing that not one of the large markets is over-supplied, with the exception of the temporary overstock in New York. At the same time many new distributing points are springing up: Utica, Brampton, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Memphis, Kansas City, Council Bluffs, Denver and many smaller places which formerly called on older markets for stock, and do so yet for that matter. Also the retailer is adding glass that he may be more independent of the wholesaler, although the slackening in demand this fall has had a result in causing cut flower prices to fluctuate less violently and within narrower limits.

It would seem that while 1904 is to be expected to bring steady business it will be necessary for success that the grower put his plant in shape to produce a uniform grade of at least a fair quality of stock and so order his affairs that the cost of production shall leave him a margin of profit under such conditions as those of the past three months. Until then he would best engage in no new adventures. For the plantsman he might seek to improve the quality of his stock without greatly increasing its cost, rather

CHRISTMAS TRADE.

Taking all things into consideration, it is apparent that the Christmas trade was, if not the best on record, certainly much more satisfactory than the conditions early in the month would have warranted one in anticipating. Of course, there is, here and there, an unfavorable report, generally due to unfavorable weather or occasionally to some other influence, but on the whole business was very good.

Practically all the wholesale cut flower markets cleared up in good shape, but rose prices did not average quite so high as in previous years. The good stock brought fine figures, but the small roses were poor property. Beauties had been expected to be very plentiful but proved short of the demand. A noticeable feature was that in New York the price of Beauties was started away up and came down to the mark attained in Philadelphia and Chicago from a start considerably lower.

Carnations with color are always short for Christmas and an unprecedented scarcity had been predicted, but the quantities available proved a surprise in practically every market in the country. However, it was found profitable to maintain prices on all fresh colored stock and, considering that receipts were so very large, it should have been a Merry Christmas for the growers, even if the blizzard did hit them that night.

The violet growers were the ones who were disappointed. In many localities December was a slow month for violets and the producers hoarded up their cut and fairly swamped the markets the day before Christmas. The same story is told in almost every large city.

One pleasing feature is the evidence that growers generally are learning the folly of salting their stock. The greater the development of the flowering plant trade the more suicidal this becomes and pickling is no longer practiced save by those growers who have not yet seen the light. Unfortunately there are said to still be many such shipping into the New York market.

The plant men had a fine season. They had big stocks in prime condition and sold out at fair figures. The day is past when the retailers in the big cities will stock up with cut flowers. They provide a good lot of plants, on which they can make a nice profit, and let the wholesaler take the risk of carrying the general run of stock. Happily this year the retail demand was so good that the wholesale markets were mostly swept bare. But the call came at the last moment and it is an argument against excessively high prices on items in which there is no scarcity.

A BOSTON STORE.

The illustration on page 263 shows the store of S. Hoffman, 925 Boylston street, Boston, as it appeared on the evening of December 21. Mr. Hoffman is a New Yorker who, for the past four years has been with Julius Zinn, on Beacon street, Boston. He opened on his own account only two months ago and many thought that, being so close to Thomas F. Galvin's Back Bay store, his location was not a favorable one. The photograph shows that quite a stock was on hand for the holiday trade, but Christmas afternoon the store was all cleaned out and more stock might have been sold. Mr. Hoffman is also getting quite a nice run of decorating jobs.

New Place of John G. Heinel & Son, Terre Haute, Ind.

before, with the greatest crops ever known and Europe dependent upon us for much of her food supply, our trade is on solid industrial ground, well above the turbulent waters of Wall street.

The Prospect.

The year 1904 holds out every prospect of a long period of steady, prosperous business. Boom times are neither to be anticipated nor desired, but a chance for every man conducting an honest business to clear his legitimate percentage. Such general conditions may not make record prices in the florist trade, but they will insure a reasonable profit to the grower of good stock. It has already been demonstrated that the producer of goods of the best average quality is the one who gets the money; small roses, short carnations, colorless violets are all hard to sell.

er than to increase its quantity faster than the increase in population in his territory. The store man will find the greatest profit in the end by seeking to make quality, taste and good service, rather than low prices the magnet which draws people to his store.

HEINL'S NEW STORE.

The illustration on this page shows the new store and conservatory of John G. Heinel & Son, at Terre Haute, Ind. The place is still run under the old name by Fred G. Heinel, the founder of the business, John G. Heinel, having retired from the firm several years ago. The store is up to date in every respect, lighted by electricity, wood work finished in white enamel and gold, with the show window in white tile. Mr. Heinel has his residence above the store.

ROSES.

New Varieties.

The prospects for the rose grower during the coming year apparently are bright and a great amount of interest will be centered in the cultural methods employed by reason of the many new varieties which are promised. During the past year and, indeed, since Liberty was put on the market, there has been no variety disseminated which has created any great furore. This year conditions will be more interesting. We will have the much lauded La Detroit, a variety which, if it lives up to its recommendations, will surely become a prime favorite. Yet when we recall with what eclat Belle Siebrecht made its debut and how swift its race was run we may be excused if we are the least little bit skeptical and shy. We can also recall how quietly and modestly Bridesmaid came upon the stage and how soon it became a standing favorite, a place it still occupies.

In a recent conversation with Mr. Hopp, the originator of La Detroit, he minutely described the rose, its habit, freedom of growth, length of stem, size of bloom, color and keeping qualities, all of which attributes should place it in the front ranks in commercial culture. It is easily managed, doing well under the same kind of treatment and temperature as Bridesmaid, and is expected to put that old favorite a little in the shade.

Mr. Cook, of Baltimore, has two seedlings as yet unnamed, one a pure white which is described as the largest white in cultivation, stems stiff, erect and blooms fragrant. He also has a red seedling of fair promise, the strongest growing of all the reds, large flower, very fragrant and which from reports has proved of easy culture under glass. Benjamin Dorrance also promises to put his new rose, No. 6, on the market. This is a free blooming rose with tea fragrance, stiff in habit and upright in growth, flower as large as a Bridesmaid, color clear salmon, shading to yellow.

The E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond, Ind. has a batch of seedlings of many colors and which show remarkably good qualities. Some of the reds promise to outstrip Liberty and few of us would regret if this eccentric fascinator was forced to get down and out. They have also a yellow which is reported to be sustaining a good character. There are also some good pinks which will undoubtedly be heard from later on.

Last but not least we will have Mr. Reinberg's sport from Golden Gate which he has named after our old friend, Uncle John Thorpe. As this has the same habit, character and free blooming qualities as its parent it needs no recommendation, its chief merit being its solidity of color as distinguishing it from that variety.

I notice that Mme. Chatenay is forging ahead and seems to be coming into favor as a standard variety, and will no doubt be grown more generally the coming season. Sunrise as an oddity still keeps its place in public favor.

Now there seems to be work and trouble enough ahead of us before we master all the cultural peculiarities of each of these varieties, but if we wish to keep up with the procession we must direct our energies to have the newest and grow them to as near perfection as possible, not necessarily in large quantities, as the almost prohibitory prices demanded for some of these varieties will restrain many growers from investing largely, but in sufficient quantity to make the study interesting and to determine their value under local conditions.

During the past year I have been greatly encouraged in my work by the expressions of approval and good will from many of our readers and feel rather happy at this happy season to know that my efforts have been of some benefit to those brethren in their trouble.

In the coming year as in the past I will (D. V.) continue my work with the same interest, and endeavor as far as my ability extends to aid by advice those who may desire it. That our present bright prospects may be realized, and that the ensuing year may bring happiness and prosperity to all is the sincere wish of RIBES.

MUMS DAMPING.

We have sent you some mums that we are having trouble with. The varieties are Robinson, Eaton and Appleton. We benched them June 15 in rotted sods and mixed with bone meal. They grew nicely all through the summer and were six feet high by the first week in November, with large buds partly developed. But the outer petals start to decay. We have had bright sunshine every day for six weeks, and that made the mums grow quite fast, the temperature rising to 70 degrees in the daytime and 50 degrees at night. Kindly tell us why the outside petals decay.

E. B.

It is late in the day to answer this query, since it has been lost in the mails for a month, but as a matter of courtesy to E. B. we would say that his troubles were what is known as damping of the flowers. This trouble was very prevalent this fall in many sections of the country and was due primarily to the warm weather, which made the flowers soft and susceptible to injury from the moisture condensing on the petals. When this appears I would recommend always to shade the glass by spraying some lime over it with a syringe. This will keep down the temperature and keep the sun off the flowers. Never close the house up tight when the flowers are developing, except in very severe weather. The chrysanthemum needs, when the flowers are finishing, a cool, dry moving atmosphere. Spraying should be stopped and only such water applied to the benches as is necessary to keep them moist. As a general thing the finer grown the plants the more susceptible are the flowers to damping and much care has to be taken when the days are warm and bright, as they were this year.

STOCK MUMS AND EATON.

My chrysanthemums are cut and I am needing bench room for lettuce. How shall I handle the old plants so as to get stock off of them for next season? Can I remove them from the bench? Also please tell me why my Eatons did not open in the center but turned black.

L. H. W.

The plants may be moved from the bench and replanted in boxes or pots or planted closely together at one end of the bench, whichever may be convenient. There is no difficulty in handling stock plants if they are only placed in a cool house for the winter months. If room is very limited the cuttings may be taken off now and rooted in sand. Then the old plants may be thrown away entirely and the stock increased in spring by topping the cuttings rooted now. This latter course is preferable to setting the stock plants under the bench, somewhere where they are neglected entirely until needed in the spring.

With regard to the Eatons turning black, L. H. W. is only in the same predicament as many other growers. The weather was too warm and the flowers were very soft and spotted easily, the consequence being that many varieties suffered heavily. If his flowers were not spotted except just the center it is possible that L. H. W. had been spraying his plants too much after the bud showed color. The cup-shaped formation of the bud of Eaton is such that water lays in it and spraying should be stopped as soon as the bud shows color.

PRIMULA POISONING.

Several subscribers having recently written as to having been poisoned by handling Primula obconica, we reprint herewith notes as to remedies which have been published when the question has previously been under discussion:

One reader writes: "As to a remedy for poisoning by Primula obconica, would say I have been poisoned several times. I used Luytie's Pinus ointment as a local application and sulphur and cream of tartar to purify the blood. I used one-third cream of tartar and two-thirds sulphur, mixed well. Dose, one teaspoonful every morning in milk. Also take good nourishment. I have never known it to fail."

Another says: "Tell the sufferer to try good thick sweet cream well and frequently rubbed on as a lotion. This has with us proved a sovereign remedy."

A Connecticut reader writes: "It seems to me that the action of Primula obconica poisoning is similar to that of the poison ivy. The cure in both cases, as far as my experience goes, is a free application of tincture of blood-root. Apply the tincture with a sponge or clean cloth to the parts affected. I have known of several cures by this tincture where the poisoning has been caused by either the ivy or the primula."

"A few applications of peroxide of hydrogen gave me relief," writes a Pennsylvanian.

An alcohol solution of sugar of lead is recommended by the Department of Agriculture as an antidote for rhus poisoning. It will probably cure primula poisoning as well. An application of the juice of Impatiens fulva is said to cure rhus poisoning.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Easter Lilies.

The new year will bring with it much work in the houses. Many crops have been disposed of, or shrunk in volume, and future crops will need attention. Of as much importance as any crop is the Easter lilies, both the Japan and Bermuda. I hear some growers still say that they like the Bermuda variety the best; that's because they may have some difficulty in getting the Japan-grown bulbs in time. Those that have the Bermuda bulbs up seven or eight inches now will certainly have no trouble in getting them in bloom by Easter, even in a night temperature of 55 degrees.

I know that some eastern growers do not care about getting their Japan bulbs into heat much before New Year's. If they are well rooted and have but an inch or so of growth at this time, they have no trouble in flowering them in time. To leave them in a cold frame till New Year's would have been, for us, risky this year, for we have had a most steady cold December. So we brought them in early in the month and kept them in a cool house and they are now not two inches above the soil and, if well rooted, that will do. From now on, for two or three weeks, give them 55 degrees at night; then increase to 60 degrees and the last month they will need 65 degrees. The degree of temperature must be governed by the condition of the plant.

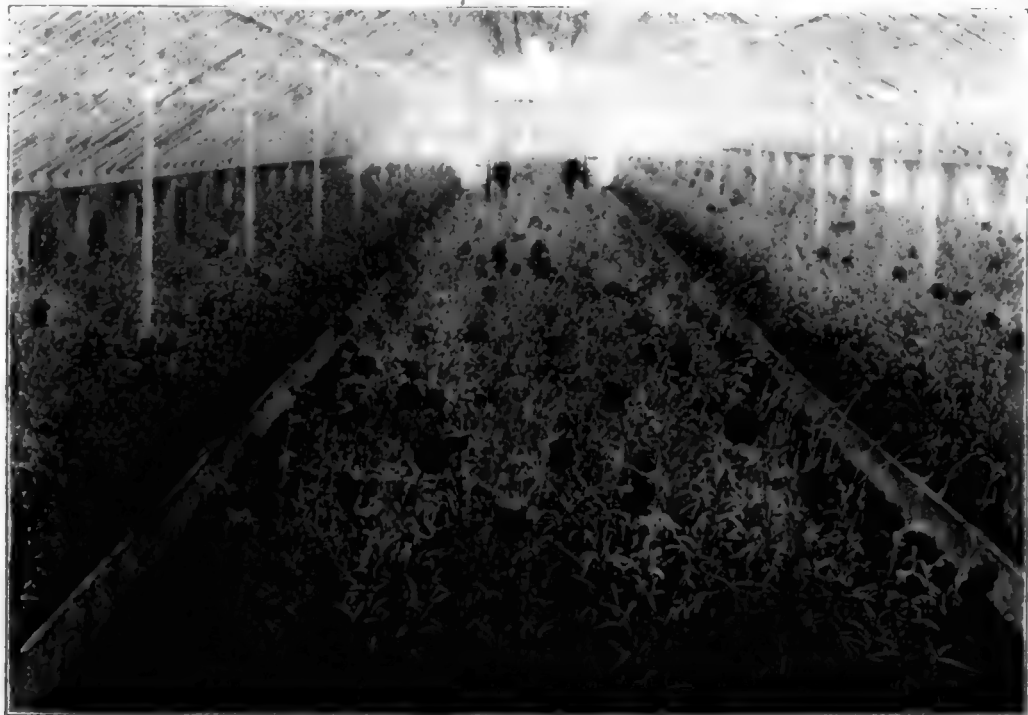

You cannot put a thousand lilies into a house at any given temperature and expect that the whole lot, or even half of them, will bloom at the same time. They will not; there will be a difference of several weeks. This is more noticeable with the Bermuda than with the Japan bulbs, showing that the Bermudas we get nowadays are a very mixed lot. So some handling, perhaps a good deal, is needed to get ninety per cent in bloom at the right time. I have found that these lilies do not like to be taken at once from a night temperature of 60 degrees and placed in 50 degrees. Unless their buds are about ready to open they will just about stand still, but it will be some time yet before that will be necessary, and I will remind you again.

No one has said positively what is the cause of the tips of the lily leaves turning brown. It may be the constant fuming that is necessary and the slowly burning tobacco dust is preferable to burning stems. There is more nicotine and less hot smoke. There is, however, no doubt that the twisting and bursting of the buds is the result of a puncture by aphides when the buds are very small, and therefore a spraying with weak tobacco water into the heart of the crown of the thickly clustered leaves is essential before the buds are visible.

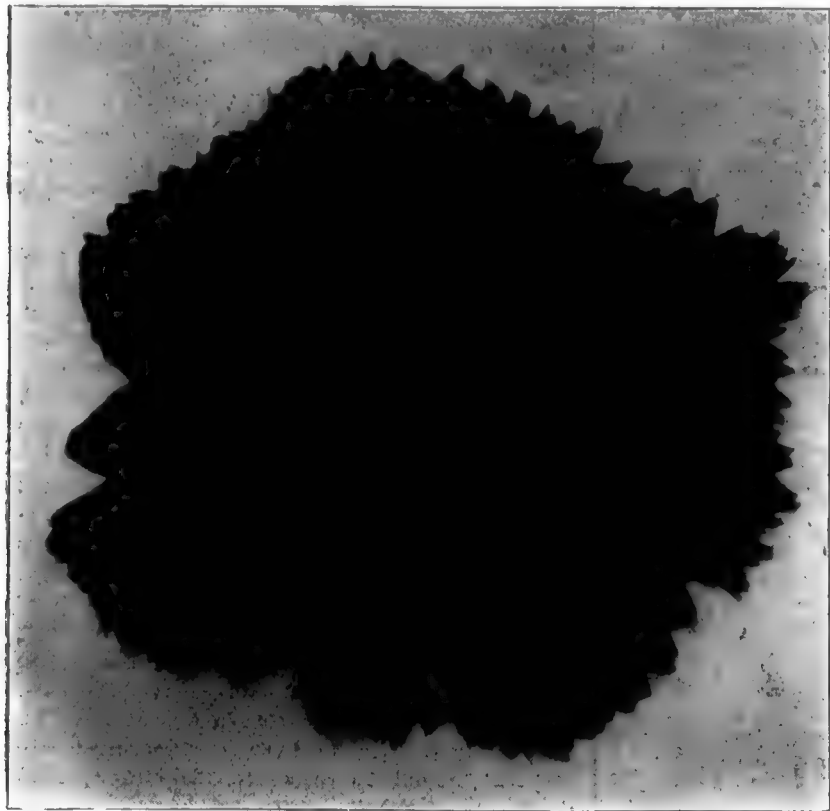

Dutch Bulbs.

Tulips and Von Sion narcissi can now be brought in without much fear of failure. The greatest essential to early flowering is that they be well rooted in the flats and those put into the flats soon after received will now be in this condition. For all of January and part of February a strong heat is necessary. It should be evident to all that the nearer you get to their natural flowering time the less forcing is required. This holds good not only with bulbs but with all the roots and shrubs we flower in the greenhouse.

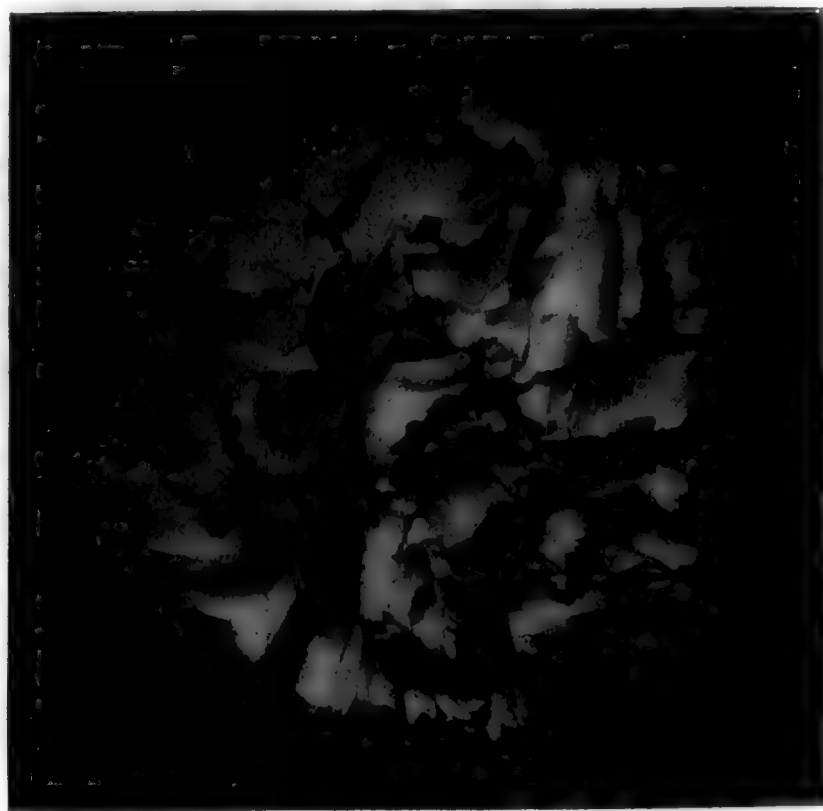

Vermilion Brilliant, Yellow Prince, Cottage Maid, Proserpine and La Reine, among tulips, and Trumpet Major and Von Sion narcissi you are sure to grow and they will want a top heat of 80 degrees at least. Only those forcing large quantities have a house that can be called such a hot box as that, but you can, by putting some cheese cloth over them and hanging it down in front of the bench, easily confine the heat around them. I am supposing you have a bench with two or three hot water or steam pipes beneath it and you let the heat come up between the wall and the bench. They want no bottom heat; in fact, a strong heat at the roots, such as would result from slates, would be a detriment. They don't want their roots scorched. A strong, moist top heat is what they want and the shade of the cheese cloth will draw up the stems and this drawing up by shade is necessary until the middle of February, after which they make stem enough. Water copiously every day and if you are firing hard, spray once besides.

Lily of the Valley.

You can from now on force the newly imported roots. As I have had occasion to say before, the conditions for successfully forcing the valley are almost directly opposite those for tulips. The valley makes no roots; it is brought in perfectly dormant and by great heat at the roots the flower is forced up. Not less than six inches of sand should be in the bed for, little as the roots seem to do, they should have only their tips chopped off. If the sand is 85 degrees and the atmosphere 50 you will have about ideal conditions. The base of the pip should be even with the surface of the sand. We have covered the pips or crowns with sphagnum moss and left some uncovered and noticed no difference.

One of the most important features of the operation is that the edge of your bench should have a board hinged at the level of the sand and when you water the sand, which is daily, this board can be let down so that you can water the bed without wetting the flowers. For the first two weeks they can be watered overhead, but as soon as the spike appears only keep the sand moist.

Above the level of the sand the boards on all sides should be one foot higher. The first two weeks we cover with a shutter made of ½-inch boards. Then we use in place of the boards a frame of cheese cloth and for the last few days, unless the sun is strong, nothing at all, as full daylight gives color to the foliage. There were many experiments and mistakes made in forcing this dainty flower and perhaps the writer does not know it all yet, but we know that a warm, wet sand and cool top, keeping water away from the buds and flowers are the great essentials.

By putting in a few hundred or few thousands, according to your wants, every week without a miss you will have valley till it is in flower out of doors. If you should be going to rig up a bed to hold a few thousands, don't let it be in a house that perhaps in March you will want to run up to 70 degrees to force some belated lilies. If you do your valley will be a failure. Keep a cool top.

Lilacs.

It is very nice to have a few white lilacs from now on. They are easily brought into flower if you have the temperature, which for some weeks yet should be 70 degrees. Keep them well sprayed till they show color.

Shifting Geraniums.

One of our most important jobs at New Year's is to shift our zonale geraniums from a 2-inch to a 3-inch. Some may consider this a waste of labor and may keep them in the 2 or 2½-inch till the middle of February and then shift into 3½ or 4-inch, their last shift. We think the shift now into a 3-inch pays well. They will take up little more room and be much stouter and more vigorous and by the end of this month will give us, the most of them, a cutting, "a little piece off the top." And by this shift now their roots are active and they break strong and sturdy and the final shift into 4-inch, when they will want lots of room, can be deferred till after Easter.

Rambler and hybrid perpetual roses will want starting soon, but they will wait a week.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

CARNATION NOVELTIES.

The accompanying illustrations show two of the Chicago Carnation Company's novelties. Crusader is the scarlet which showed up so well at the last Chicago Florists' Club exhibition. Mr. Hartshorne says, in speaking of this variety: "We did not claim great for it as an exhibition variety, but now it seems there is nothing in sight that can equal it in this respect. The color is even, there being no white spots on it at all. Mr. Wienhoeber, of Chicago, who handles the blooms, claims it to be the ideal shade of scarlet for his trade, it being more of the old Portia color than the Adonis." The photograph of the house also reproduced here shows a very fine growth and a big crop of buds.

Reliance is their new white, a very regularly formed flower and a free grower. It scored 90 points on several occasions, but Mr. Hartshorne says it is no more than justice to state that in the recent cold, dark weather, from 10 to 20 per cent have bursted.

VIOLET GROWING.

Violet growing is something that every florist must have a try at before he can be content, and it is a business which many a woman, and man, too, believes can be engaged in without experience but with quick success. To the latter the article on Violet Growing as a Business, by B. T. Galloway, published in the January issue of Country Life in America, will probably be an encouragement to make the experiment, although Prof. Galloway cannot be charged with not having sought to point out the difficulties and the chances of failure.

Prof. Galloway is chief of the bureau of plant industry in the United States Department of Agriculture and author of Commercial Violet Culture, the standard work on the subject and now in its second edition. The article under review deals with the writer's experience in company with P. H. Dorsett in building the violet growing establishment at Garrett Park, Md., now conducted by David Bisset. The aim is primarily to interest the amateur reader, but many points covered are of interest to the trade grower.

Beginning with twenty hotbed sash, the first step was to buy stock from the advertisers of "cuttings." "We found," says Mr. Galloway, "that they could be purchased all the way from $5 to $20 per thousand, but we did not find, until a year later, that the $20 cuttings were often many times the cheapest. They were really divisions of the old crowns and had not been rooted in sand at all, as should have been the case."

The first year's expense, including material for a house 20x60, was $130, and the receipts $260. The next season $410 was spent and $640 received. The third year $250 was the outgo, no additions being made to the glass, and the income was $1,220. The fourth year a new house was built and expenditures were $430, with receipts of $2,700. All the work of building, etc., was performed by the partners to the venture. The sash bars, etc., came from a western firm, for "we found we could get the material and have it shipped a thousand miles cheaper than it could be made for us by local dealers."

The article shows that in the second year, with average commercial stock, 916 plants of Marie Louise gave 21,215 flowers, or an average of slightly more than twenty-three to the plant. At the same time 1,895 plants of Lady Campbell gave 97,485 flowers, or more than fifty-one per plant. But the most interesting feature to the trade grower is the success which attended the use of sand-rooted cuttings taken from carefully selected plants. The best 200 plants were marked with a wire stake to which a shipping tag was attached for recording the cut. With the use of this tobacco killed aphids, but brought on spot. Cyanide gas was found the best fumigant after its use was thoroughly understood. But perhaps Messrs. Galloway and Dorsett did not lack in the foresight and attention to little things, which they say is at the bottom of most failures in violet growing.

To the mind of the average trade reader one sentence in Mr. Galloway's very interesting article fails of the proper emphasis. It is this:

"Thomas Devey & Sons are pioneers in the business and have gone on successfully from year to year, although others about them have succeeded for a while and failed." (The italics are ours.)

"Succeeded for a while and failed." There's the rub. Far better were it if failure came in the beginning, when the place is small, the loss light and youth and ambition remain to seek success on some road where the end is not almost certain discouragement.

FREDERIC W. TAYLOR.

The chief of the departments of agriculture and horticulture at the St. Louis World's Fair was born in Nebraska in 1860, and, though widely traveled and having spent two and a half years in the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, is essentially and always a typical stock and a very small increase in the number of plants the returns were practically doubled. The next year cuttings were taken from no plants which did not give at least seventy-five flowers, and there was a still further increase in crop. This is a point worth the thought of every grower.

Mr. Galloway does not seem to have enjoyed more than a mild experience with the many ills which ruin other growers' crops almost in a day. He says he found red spider to be controlled by the hose. Heavy fumigation with western man, with the energy and push which that term implies. His father, William Taylor, was a well-known nurseryman in western Iowa, and almost immediately upon reaching his majority the son embarked in the business for himself, at the same time managing a large stock farm. In 1887 Mr. Taylor was, without any knowledge on his part that he was being considered, offered the professorship of horticulture at the University of Nebraska. This position he accepted and held for several years, at the same time carrying the organization and management of the farmers' institutes of the state and of the extension of the university.

At the Chicago World's Fair Mr. Taylor had charge of the Nebraska horticultural exhibit, which the chief of the department wrote to him was not, in his opinion, excelled by any exhibit there when the amount of funds available was considered. A year before the Trans-Mississippi Exposition opened in Omaha in 1898 Mr. Taylor was appointed superintendent of agriculture and horticulture. It is doubtful whether as good a purely agricultural exhibit has ever been made in this country. Mr. Taylor insisted upon the use of the agricultural products, grains, grasses, etc., in the installation, to the exclusion, so far as possible, of mere showy furniture and carpentry work. The result was astonishing and most satisfactory, as showing the fine results easily obtained by the artistic use of the materials mentioned.

At the Pan-American Exposition Mr. Taylor was the first exposition man secured. The committee on concessions requested his appointment, and he was placed in charge of that department nearly two years before the opening day. When the director-general was appointed he desired to place in Mr. Taylor's charge agriculture, horticulture, forestry and live stock, but the concessions committee was not willing to release him from their department. So a compromise was effected, under which he became director of concessions and superintendent of horticulture, forestry and foods and their accessories. The exposition sent Mr. Taylor to Paris to gain some desired information, and he has made several visits to Europe and Mexico.

In spite of the fact that the exposition was a failure financially, Mr. Taylor's acute business ability is well illustrated by the fact that the concessions produced at least fifteen per cent more money to the exposition in proportion to the paid attendance than did the same department in Chicago, which held the previous record. The horticultural exhibit was one of the pronounced successes of the exposition, and was largely due to the foresight exercised by the superintendent in selecting his lieutenants and arranging for the splendid plant exhibit outside, for the cold storage of fruit of the previous year's crop, that the exhibit might be full and complete during the entire period of the exposition.

At the Louisiana Purchase Exposition will be presented by far the greatest opportunity of the world's history to make a magnificent display of the products of the soil, and Mr. Taylor is enthusiastic in the belief that as the possibilities become apparent those who must be depended upon to do the greater part of it will not only rise to the occasion, but in every way surpass anything ever done in the history of expositions. The success of the horticultural department is beyond question, all the leading firms having already applied for space and a great quantity of outdoor exhibits being already in the ground, with everything adding to the number.

FORT MADISON, IA.—On the night of December 21 fire destroyed Carl Boll's carnation house and badly damaged the rose house, destroying much stock. The loss is estimated at $2,500 and no insurance.

Plan for Furnace and Flue with Hot Water Coil in Fire Box.

FURNACE AND FLUE.

I want to heat a greenhouse 18x50 feet, even span, running east and west, no glass in ends or sides. The side walls are four feet high and the roof is at an angle of about 35 degrees. A night temperature of 50 degrees is necessary when it is 10 degrees below zero outdoors. I want to use a flue and would like full directions for building both furnace and flue.

I also want to heat an adjoining greenhouse 10x20 feet, glass in one end, roof at an angle of 35 degrees, even span, side walls four feet high. Here a night temperature of 60 degrees is needed. I want to use hot water to heat this small house. How can I arrange pipes in the furnace in the larger house to heat the small one? Also how many and what size pipes will it take to heat the house?
E. W. H.

While the flue is not to be recommended where other plans of heating can be afforded, the house in question can be heated by a flue and furnace constructed as shown in the sketches, Fig. I and II. Locate the furnace at the west end of the house. Dig a pit about four feet wide and two feet deep extending at least five feet inside the greenhouse and any convenient distance on the outside. Construct a drain of tile on boards to carry off any surface water which might get into the pit. In Fig. I a plan of the furnace and flue is given. The furnace extends about nine inches outside the greenhouse wall; has walls thirteen inches thick, nine inches common arch brick lined with fire brick. For this building the furnace should be three feet long by one foot eight inches wide in the clear on the inside, which gives the furnace five square feet of grate surface. An ash pit eighteen inches deep, counting from the top of the grate bars, should be provided. The fire box should also be at least twelve inches in height from grate surface to position of the $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch pipes shown in Fig. II, which should be connected at the front of the furnace with return bends and at the rear with cast-iron manifolds. One pipe of each of the five pair should be carried into a manifold to receive the return water and one from each pair carried a little farther back into a manifold to receive the flow pipe which is to heat the 10x20 house. The flow had best be 2-inch pipe. At the end of the manifold "T" on the returns marked "exp." in Fig. II a $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch reducer should be placed in the end of the manifold and into this screw a street "L" which should carry a $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch pipe leading to the peak of the greenhouse and into the bottom of an expansion tank which should hold ten or fifteen gallons. A second-hand steel water tank is ideal for this purpose. The 2-inch riser or flow pipe can be carried from the heater directly under the benches in the 10x20 house and thereby a manifold be broken up into four $1\frac{1}{4}$ -inch pipes running around the house and again uniting in a manifold at the opposite side of the house. The cooled water would be returned by a $1\frac{1}{4}$ -inch pipe to the manifold at the rear of the furnace marked (ret) in Fig. II. The heating surface in the furnace will be made up of ten $1\frac{1}{4}$ -inch pipes running from end to end of the furnace as shown in Fig. II.

The flue should run entirely around the house and discharge into a chimney built on top of or by the side of the furnace. The throat of the flue should be four inches wide and about ten inches deep at the end near the furnace and will be most convenient if taken off at the side of the furnace, as shown in Fig. I. For the first thirty feet the flue should be made of brick four inches and lined with fire brick set on edge, thus making a 6-inch side wall, which should be capped with a layer of fire brick and jacketed with common brick. From thirty feet on, the flue may be made of ordinary 8-inch terra cotta pipe, using elbows at the corners and packing the joints thoroughly with the best cement. The earth or supports for the flue should make a uniform grade around the house and have a rise of at least two feet in the distance, which will be about 110 feet. A "T" joint of terra cotta pipe can be placed on top of the furnace at the proper height to receive the end of the flue, and by extending the perpendicular portion of the terra cotta pipe the chimney can be made.

HARTFORD, CONN.—Christmas trade was very heavy and the weather is very cold, below zero, which does not give the greenhouse men much chance to rest up.

THRIPS ON FICUS.

We have in our collection a large rubber tree six feet high which I think is diseased, as enclosed leaf shows. Kindly give me advice as soon as possible in the REVIEW.
R. T.

The leaf in question does not appear to be diseased, but has been injured by a bad attack of thrips, there being abundant evidence of the work of these troublesome insects. Unless there are some tender plants in the same greenhouse that may be injured by strong tobacco smoke, I would suggest, as the easiest method to get rid of the thrips, a strong fumigation with tobacco dust, or Aphis Punk on two or three evenings in succession.

If not convenient to do this, the plant could be carried out into the potting shed, then laid upon its side on the bench or floor, and given a thorough syringing with strong tobacco water or solution of tobacco soap, turning the plant around in order to reach all the foliage with the insecticide. From the fact that it is not easy to reach all the insects with one application, it may be found necessary to repeat the dose.

A VISIT TO SYRACUSE.

That wonderful carnation, Flamingo, needs no praise from me, but never having seen it growing I was glad to step off a fast train and take a trolley to Delaware street, Syracuse. While waiting for the car who should be waiting on the opposite corner but C. W. Ward; very strange but all the more pleasant. We found Mr. Marquisee and several assistants very busy with designs, etc. Yet I know he was glad to see us and soon we had viewed several houses of Flamingo, one house allowed to flower, the others stopped back for propagating. To me the house that was devoted to flowers was a most beautiful sight. Most of you carnation specialists have seen the blooms of Flamingo, but only a few have seen it on the benches. The writer always carries a two-foot rule in his revolver pocket and a number of the stems were measured. They would average from soil to flower three feet. This would give you a 30-inch stem without crippling the plant. Surely that is stem enough, and they hold the flower up perfectly. While some of the largest flowers measured over three inches, you might call it a plump 3-inch flower. There is no stubby slow growth or useless grass about Flamingo, every growth runs up to a flower. I saw no bursted flowers or buds. Perhaps when cut the color of the foliage may not be of particular value, but as a growing plant the habit and deep bluish green of the foliage gives it a rich appearance. There may be some other scarlet carnations coming on, aspirants for fame, but I have not seen them and the sight of these beds was to me as much an advance over any scarlet carnation I have ever seen as Enchantress is over old Morning Glory. It is only justice to say the grand stems and flowers and general vigor I saw were produced without the slightest stimulant, either of surface dressing or liquid manure.

Albatross is a splendid free white and, as we saw it, would be a most profitable variety and Mr. Marquisee said it was lifted late, not that it wants that treatment, but it was "a case of force."

Sunbird we did not see, as it is grown at another establishment, and before Mr. Marquisee and Mr. Ward had finished discussing the art of propagating, the shade of evening had closed over us and there was only time to partake of Mr. Marquisee's kind hospitality and then take the west bound train.

Now, as I said at the start, these carnations need no praise from me. Their sale is enormous, as has been noticed in the press, but I must add that never have I seen a more healthy, ideal lot of cuttings in the sand and the 200,000 or 300,000 there will go quickly; and the almost nervous anxiety, not for more orders, but to fill in only a first-class shape the orders he has, is refreshing and somewhat unique in the distribution of new varieties. Mr. Marquisee will fill his orders and fill them well. W. S.

Department of Plant Registration.

M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass., submits for registration the following new roses:

Minnehaha, a hybrid between Wichuriana and Paul Neyron; flower double, about two inches in diameter; color pink; profuse bloomer; foliage glossy, large, nine petioles to each leaf; growth vigorous.

Hiawatha, a hybrid between Crimson Rambler and Paul's Carmine Pillar; flowers single, shell shaped, in large clusters, remaining on plant for fully three weeks; petals crimson, tips scarlet, base white, foliage very dark, glossy, growth vigorous.

A CARNATION NIGHT.

At the last regular meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, it was, on motion, agreed to extend an invitation to all carnation growers to send their novelties to the next regular meeting of said club, to be held Tuesday, January 5, 1904, so that Philadelphians may carefully look them over and note how good they are. The members always turn out in goodly numbers on these red letter day occasions, and it will naturally be a mutual advantage to owners of novelties and the purchasers of the same to bring or send them to this meeting. It was at Philadelphia that the uplifting of the divine flower first took definite shape and the good work is still going on.

By forwarding the flowers by express, prepaid, carefully packed, in care of David Rust, of the club room committee, Florists' Club of Philadelphia, Horticultural Hall, Broad street, below Locust, Philadelphia, Pa., same will be received in due course and properly taken care of. Don't forget the day and date, namely, Tuesday, January 5, 1904.

AN ADDRESS TO UTICANS.

William Scott journeyed down to Utica, N. Y., December 16, and this is what one of the local papers said of the club meeting that night:

About forty members of the Utica Florists' Club met at Maennerchor Hall last evening and listened to a very instructive talk on the art of growing carnations, by William Scott, of Buffalo. Mr. Scott is a carnation grower of national reputation, and florists enjoy the privilege of bringing their problems to him for solution. Among those present last evening were members of the club from St. Johnsville,

NOTE

The Editor is pleased when a Reader presents his ideas on any subject treated in the REVIEW. An experience is the best teacher, so do we learn fastest by an exchange of experiences. Many valuable points are brought out by discussion.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO HEAR FROM YOU.

Little Falls, Herkimer, Rome, Barneveld and many other points. Mr. Scott's remarks were interspersed with anecdotes which were enjoyable, as they were appropriate. He said in part:

The cultivation of the carnation has had much attention for the past ten years. Several books have been published in regard to it. The latest is that of C. W. Ward, who has done a good thing in following out pedigrees. By his system of crossing he seeks to produce certain colors. His method of culture does not differ materially from that of most other people. But some of the best carnations have been raised haphazard. Ward's book deals largely with sub-watering. This may do for radishes, but I don't believe in it for roses and carnations. Young Guenther, who is one of the most successful rose growers in Buffalo, made an experiment which showed that those grown on a brick foundation were best, those on benches next, and those by subwatering last.

Of the thousands of seedlings that are annually thought good enough to grow, the great majority are not in it after the third year. They develop diseases and are carried to the rubbish heap. Propagation by cuttings is not raising a new individual, but is dividing an old variety. In our treatment we do not give these cuttings natural or favorable conditions. The carnation is not indigenous to this country. Where it is native it has a rest in winter, but we give it no rest at all. We grow it from everlasting to everlasting and that is the cause of weak stems, bursting and other ills.

It is pretty well understood now that early planting is the thing. Formerly if we lifted them the last week in September or the first week in October we thought we were doing pretty well. Then all were short-stemmed. Now we have a long stem and a fine flower. But they get no rest at all. I think it is the same with roses. They also play out from continual propagation under artificial conditions. The greatest cure, or rather the greatest preventive against this playing out, is to give them natural and rational conditions and rest.

The carnation has lately been showing signs of decay. Of the thousands propagated, but few hold their place and the only remedy for this is early propagation. The first week in August is late enough to lift and bring into the houses any carnations. Perhaps by the middle of November or first of December they are rooted. Then they are placed out on flats or benches. After they are rooted in the flats put down the temperature on them to 40 degrees. About the middle of February put them in three inch pots and then subject them to right down cold treatment, 38 or 40 degrees, and keep them there through February, March and April. That will give them three months of natural rest and that will be the secret of making them healthy. That is the best way to raise your stock. Propagate early and give two or three months' rest and you bring them back to their natural conditions.

As to new varieties, a good scarlet is needed. We have a good one in Marquisee's Flamingo. Ten years ago Mr. Marquisee was hardly known among carnation growers, but he is lucky in having brought out in two years two such wonderful carnations as the Marquis and Flamingo. Mr. Marquisee was originally from Utica, but in Syracuse, when he brought out the Marquis, he perpetrated this: "I have come to Syracuse and have made my mark-you-see!" Of late there have been altogether too many varieties.

To propagate it is best to keep the temperature at bottom to 60 and the top heat at 50 degrees. Boards are rather cold. I believe there is nothing better than tiles. I have a nearly flat tile two inches thick, covered with sand and the temperature is about 60, and that of the atmosphere at night about 50 degrees. I believe these are the right conditions to root carnations. Don't stimulate too much. A temperature of 60 encourages root growth; anything above 50 for the top is harmful. Is it better to plant them in the field or to keep them inside? There is always a demand for carnations, even in October and November. It is better to have carnations from October through December than to have them in April, May and June.

The speaker gave it as his opinion that it is better to grow carnations under glass all the year than to set them out in the garden in the summer. He held this to be true not only of the Prosperity, Lawson and the finest varieties, but of all varieties. He said: I used to think that two or three months out of doors gave them stimulus, but I don't think so now. If they are kept till May 25 or June 1. I think you will get better results than in any other way. You will get so many more flowers at Christmas, when you want them. If planted in the field in summer there is sure to be a check, especially if there should be little rain in June or July.

The carnation grows in all kinds of soil. My neighbor, W. J. Palmer, grows them in stiff clay as well as anywhere. The fattest, biggest, ripest and best carnations grow twenty miles outside of Chicago in fat, black, prairie loam. If I had the choice of soil, it would be a heavy loam approaching clay, the ideal soil for roses. There is much disintegrated lime in the soil where I live and we do not suffer from stem-rot.

If you force certain varieties, they will produce more flowers, but they will be smaller and the stems weaker. As to temperature, 50 degrees at night will do, but in the day time it should be 65. The temperature in the daytime will depend largely on how light the house is. The more light, the higher temperature they will stand. At this time of year, as long as it is light, your houses will stand a temperature of 70 to 75 degrees.

As to diseases, rust is spread by syringing. In all diseases of carnations, prevention is better than cure. When you syringe carnations the pores close. Do not syringe the plants all winter. After April it may be all right. If there is any disease in your carnations, the best way is to get rid of them and get new ones. Water is a great spreader of all fungous diseases and spores. Often growers lose many carnations on account of their being planted too deep. This will kill a maple or sycamore, but an elm will stand it.

It is pretty near time we got through building wooden benches. I use low benches made of brick, filled in with rubble and covered with tile on which there are six inches of soil. In a modern built house like that of Peter Crowe, the tile benches are best and you get just as much light.

Why should not carnations be as salable as roses? They are as beautiful, fragrant, lasting and sweet as any flower. In Buffalo they bring a dollar a dozen for most varieties and $1.50 for several. The wholesaler must get from $4 to $6 per hundred for them before they will pay and they never should go less than $4 per hundred at wholesale. As refinement and culture spread, the use of flowers will increase. They are as appropriate at the birth and marriage as at death and they are no longer a luxury, but a necessity.

Mr. Scott was then bombarded with questions. In answering these he said he believed in iron gutters if they are made of cast iron. He is also in favor of butted glass, provided the location is one where the smoke of manufactories does not prevail. Overhead heating is a humbug.

IXORAS.

These gorgeous flowering and handsome hot-house plants are easily grown, requiring little or no training, being generally of a compact bush form. The flowers range in color from the most intense scarlet, through all the shades of pink to yellow and pure white, while many of them are deliciously fragrant. As a cut flower they possess fine keeping qualities, keeping, if given fresh water daily, for two weeks.

As pot plants for parlor or conservatory they are unsurpassed, many of the varieties flowering freely even in 4-inch pots and continuing to bloom for months. By a careful selection of varieties which flower at different seasons, and careful culture in hastening or retarding, a display can be made at almost any season. They are of quick growth, easily propagated, easily grown, and are altogether one of the most attractive class of hot-house shrubs.

Their insect enemies are mealy bugs, scale, red spider and thrips. Requiring a high temperature these pests, if not kept in subjection, propagate rapidly, and create a deal of damage. A liberal and forcible use of the syringe is the most adequate method of keeping them clear of these pests.

They require a fibrous heat soil with one-third of leaf mold added and about one-fifth of clean, sharp sand. This should not be pulverized, but must be packed firmly around the ball. During the growing season they should have a night temperature of 80 to 85 degrees, with a day temperature of 90 degrees with a very light shading.

As soon as they have completed their growth the shading should be removed and the temperature lowered, but it should never be allowed to fall below 60 degrees. They can be kept at this temperature indefinitely, without incurring any risks, but when wanted to bloom they must have a temperature of 70 degrees or over to fully develop the truss. At this temperature they will continue to bloom for six months, so here we have a plant which will actually be in bloom more than half of its existence.

Care must be taken not to overpot, as they produce their best blooms when the pots are full of roots, and as they require large supplies of water at all times the drainage must be perfect. They respond quickly to liquid feeding, especially when forming the flower truss, and if this is carefully attended to at this stage the size of the truss can be largely increased and the colors of the flowers much intensified.

Propagation is effected by cuttings from half ripened wood in sand. A bottom temperature of 80 degrees, with plenty of moisture in the atmosphere are desirable. When the cuttings are rooted they should be potted in 1½-inch pots, using the same kind of soil as recommended for the older plants, but it should be finely pulverized. They will now require a temperature of 80 degrees. When the roots have pushed to the side of the pot they should be gradually exposed to the light with a gradual reduction of the temperature till it reaches 70 degrees.

The varieties suited for commercial work are: I. acuminata, pure white; I. Chelsoni, orange salmon; I. Colei, pure white; I. Decora, yellow; I. Dixiana, dark orange; I. floribunda, reddish scarlet, and I. odorata, white and fragrant. They are easily seeded and many hybrid seedlings far surpass their parents in form and brilliancy of flower, but are very unstable in character.

ORNAMENTAL FOLIAGE PLANTS.

The following is a paper by John Thatcher, gardener to Edwin Le Boutilier, read before the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society:

Under this heading we have one of the most beautiful and varied class of plants cultivated under glass, which I am pleased to say are becoming more popular in this country. Let us hope the day is not far distant when every establishment in the United States will have a stove or foliage plant house. One might ask, what is more handsome than a well-grown croton, maranta or dracaena? And also to what advantage they can be used in the summer time when garden parties, receptions, etc., are held at which the florist does the decorating. They can be placed in shady places on the lawn and porches, also used in the mansion for the afternoon and evening, and they will not be in the least injured. I have heard many exclamations of surprise from ladies on seeing these plants thus used, remarking how much more beautiful they were than the common palms. During the winter anyone having any liking at all for plants can spend hours in a house of well-grown foliage plants.

The cultivation of this class of plants is very easy, providing one has a good house to grow them in. We have found that a good rest, say from about the middle of December to the middle of February, is very beneficial. During those two months we rarely have the temperature over 55 degrees during the night. The plants are kept on the dry side, and it is very rarely that they ever look worse after their rest. From that time on we advance the temperature a few degrees each week so that by the middle of March we try to not let it fall under 70 degrees. Air should be given during all favorable weather; a small crack each day during the winter will do a great amount of good in sweetening up the atmosphere, if only admitted for ten minutes. As the days get warmer more air will have to be given, but always from the top. We never use the side ventilators, as if used they dry up all the moisture. I am a great one for getting air on early in the morning and closing up again very early in the afternoon. I will say here that the best plantsman I was ever under would have full air on the stove plants by 8:30 a. m. during the summer months and would always have it closed up again by 1 p. m., and the syringe going freely, and can say we were never far from the blue ribbon at the exhibitions on that class of plants.

Shading is a very important feature in the welfare of these plants. Some varieties, such as crotons or dracaenas, will be benefited by a good amount of sun; then take the maranta and alocasia, if given sun all the color will go. We always try to get all plants that like the most sun on the sunniest side of the house, and all that do not like much sun in the shadiest spot. For shading we use white lead and coal oil, and we only have to put it on once during the season. But the ideal shading is some kind of canvas on rollers that can be pulled up and down with ropes, and then it will only have to be used on sunny days. We commence shading about the first of March.

About the first of March is also a good time to commence potting. All plants should be examined; some will not require repotting, but I have found it a good plan to look to the drainage, as imperfect drainage is one of the most serious things in the cultivation. Those that do not require repotting should have some of the old soil taken off the top and a good top-dressing given with good rich soil. Others perhaps will want most of the old soil shaken off and then put back in the same size pots, which should be quite clean and well drained.

Propagating is much the same as for all other plants; but to secure good plants of some varieties they should be mossed, and after well rooted taken off the old plant, but they will then want to be kept very close for a few weeks. Other varieties with creeping rhizomes, such as marantas, will have to be divided to increase their numbers.

I must say that many are not quite as particular as they should be in respect to soil. We use the old rotten sod, leaf mold, rotten rock sand, good dry cow manure and a small quantity of charcoal for nearly all varieties, but for marantas we add quite a portion of sphagnum moss. Peat we use very little of, as I consider good leaf mold far superior. I can say that some of the best dracaenas I ever grew were grown in nothing but sphagnum moss, and fed with Clay's fertilizer, which I like best of all, as it has given me more satisfaction than any other.

GARDENING UNDER GLASS.

[Paper read before the Kew Mutual Improvement Society, January 5 1903 by Mr. W. Watson, curator.]

Water.

"It is a fact that the older a gardener grows, the more care he takes in the watering of his plants; for year by year his experience teaches him more definitely that careless watering is the indirect, if not the direct, cause of a very large number of the diseases of plants. The difficulty in watering lies in the fact that plants require various amounts of water, according to their species, their age, their situation, the season of the year, and their actual state of health or development. The amount of water which is sufficient at any given time may be very much too large a month later, and may therefore cause considerable injury."—SORAUER.

Water forms not only the bulk of the plant itself, it is also the medium by which all the food-salts from the soil, and essential to growth, are supplied to it. These salts are made available by the action of water, as they can only be absorbed by the roots in the form of aqueous solutions. In addition to the water retained by the plant for purposes of growth, large quantities also pass through it and evaporate through the leaves, in much the same manner as most of the water supplied to the soil in watering a plant after passing through the soil escapes through the hole at the bottom of the pot. Kerner describes this process of transpiration as a perpetual stream running through the living plant whilst growth is active, and points out that the supply of water must be regulated with exactitude if the nutrition is not to be disturbed or development hindered.

A healthy plant requires a larger supply of water at the root when growth is vigorous, than it does when growth is nearly or quite at a standstill. We do not always, however, in practice make that difference in the quantity supplied which this knowledge should lead us to make. On the contrary, many gardeners appear to believe that the soil about the roots of all plants in leaf should always be wet. The injury that results from this is due largely to the fact that soil requires aeration if plants are to be healthy in it, roots requiring to be supplied with fresh air just as much as the upper portion of the plants do; for all the living parts of a plant breathe, obtaining oxygen from the air as animals do, and when they cannot obtain it they are suffocated and die. Now, if the soil is always saturated with water, air cannot get to the roots; moreover, acids, and other injurious compounds, are formed in the soil, and these act as poison to the roots. It is the craving for fresh air that causes the roots of a plant to cling to the inside surface of a pot, and to creep down amongst the drainage, where the supply of air is greater, as a rule, than in the soil itself.

The injurious, and often fatal, results of excessive watering are not always recognized, and are too often set down to some other cause.

More harm is done to plants by over-watering than by the other extreme; this is especially the case in winter, when the conditions are unfavorable to growth. The sickness and death so prevalent among plants in that season are largely, if not entirely due to excessive watering.

A comparison of the usual condition of the soil in which plants make healthy growth in the open air with that of pot-grown plants under glass will show that, although the supply of water in the former case is not excessive, yet growth is healthier and better in every way than that made under glass. A rhododendron or a bedding pelargonium growing in the open border is rarely, if ever, saturated at the roots, the water passing away too freely for this to happen, even in wet weather; and yet they grow and flower better than when grown in pots and regularly watered. The careful cultivator weighs all the conditions that affect growth: when the light is defective and the temperature low, growth is sluggish or quiescent, and the water required by the plant is then little or none.

The nature of the plant itself must not be overlooked. Some plants, particularly those that have fleshy roots and large leaves, will do with a liberal allowance of water at all times. Succulent plants, the leaf structure of which is such as to prevent loss of water from transpiration, may be kept dry at the root for long periods without suffering, although when they are growing vigorously under the influence of bright sunshine they enjoy copious supplies of water. Generally, plants with small leaves and fine hair-like roots, require careful watering at all times.

"All perennial plants have a period of rest. It is either the cold which stops all vital processes, or, as in tropical regions, the excessive drought of the hot season. During this latent period plants require very little nourishment, and even those greenhouse plants which retain their green leaves require an infinitesimal amount of water and of nutritive salts." Good cultivators of orchids recognize the need of this period of rest for all orchids, after new growth has been made, the duration and nature of the rest being varied according to the nature of the plant.

Thus, a dendrobium which, while growing, revels in water, requires a long, dry rest after growth has been made; whereas an odontoglossum is sufficiently rested if the supply of water is withheld from the roots for a month or six weeks. Many plants appear to grow and flower without this rest; but only for similar reasons to those which account for some men living under conditions which are opposed to the laws of health.

The transpiration or perspiration of plants may now be considered. The breathing pores or "stomata," which are generally situated on the under surface of the leaves, under favorable conditions give off water in the form of vapor, in quantities varying with the moisture of the surrounding atmosphere; in other words, plants perspire freely in a warm, dry atmosphere, and less freely in one that is moist, in much the same way as animals do. Anything that interferes with this function is as bad for plants as it is for animals. There are in the leaves of plants numerous ingenious contrivances for regulating transpiration, the pores opening wide when the conditions favor the free escape of moisture, and closing when they are unfavorable. The flagging of leaves caused by drought has the effect of closing the stomata, so as to stop the further loss of water. The rush or "perpetual stream" of water from the roots to the leaves, other conditions being favorable, is the accompaniment of active, rapid growth. We should therefore endeavor to maintain just that condition of soil and atmosphere which will keep this stream moving.

What happens when we keep the soil as wet, the air as moist, and the temperature as high in winter, when light is defective, as we do in the height of summer, when light is good? We find that the growth made is often of a sickly yellowish hue, and wanting in what we call "bone," indicating that some essential has been wanting whilst growth was forming. Growth made in insufficient light cannot be healthy. There are, of course, many plants, such as those used for forcing in winter, which appear to make perfect growth in these ill-balanced conditions, but we know that they require much nursing afterwards to restore them to a healthy state; indeed, a plant that has been severely forced is, as a rule, only fit for the rubbish-heap afterwards.

There is a marked difference between the growth and behavior in winter of the plants in the drier houses and those in the moist houses at Kew. If a plant has proved refractory in a stove, we have sometimes found it worth while to try it in No. 5, wherein the succulent plants are grown, and generally the results have been satisfactory. The air in this house is always drier than in any other, especially in winter, when very little water is given to the plants.

The success of our grandfathers in the cultivation of plants which we can scarcely keep alive, such as hard-wooded Cape ericas, phœnocomas, aphelexis, genetyllis, etc., was, I believe, largely due to the care they took over the watering. This was considered by far the most important of the gardeners' duties; and it was by no means unusual for the head gardener to attend to it himself—for all his best specimens, at any rate. I have seen fine specimens of erica killed in a week by an overdose of water at the root.

ST. THOMAS, ONT.—Webster & Co. say business is very good with them.

PHILADELPHIA.

Christmas Trade.

Christmas, 1903, was in many respects the most remarkable in the history of the cut flower business in this city. Up to noon on Wednesday, December 23, the feeling among the wholesalers was decided doubt as to the outcome. Some were hopeful; some felt it would be a poor Christmas; all made a gallant effort to keep up prices, but they let no order slip. From that time on an unprecedented change came. Orders poured in from every side and by Thursday night desirable stock of nearly all kinds was hard to obtain. The growers responded manfully to the call for more, sending in quantities of flowers on Friday morning, which were eagerly taken. The average of quality was superior to anything ever seen here, the quantity greater than ever. Everything nice was marketed, the left-overs being the poorer grades of tea roses and other stock.

The fluctuations in prices were startling, especially in Beauties. Fancies were offered, it is said, in quantity at $7.50 per dozen early in the week for Christmas delivery; $10 was, however, the usual price. Later $12 was the ruling figure and later still $15 a dozen was paid, in many cases with far less critical inspection.

Carnations averaged higher than in the past. The quality was very fine; fewer poor blooms were never seen, the bunching being most conscientiously done as a rule.

Much of the success of this great festival was due to the weather, which favored production and shopping alike. Taken as a whole a larger quantity of stock was consumed than ever before and more money realized, but the average returns were lower and business as a whole hardly so satisfactory, though better than generally expected.

Since Christmas.

Prices fell on the day after Christmas. Since then they have continued fairly steady and business is excellent. Quite a lot of funeral work was done, using up some of the surplus white carnations, the only color that hung at Christmas. The prospects for the new year are excellent.

A Fair Delinquent.

Eugene Bernheimer had a curious experience lately. A young woman giving references, ordered quite a lot of stock, stating she had just started in the business. The address given proved to be a private house, where she was unknown. Fortunately there was no loss to Mr. Bernheimer. The woman was probably a crank.

Motto of the successful Philadelphia business man:

"Early to bed,
Early to rise,
Wear the blue ribbon
And advertise!"

A prosperous New Year to you all.

SALVIA SPLENDENS.—Along the coasts of France and Italy this shrub grows and blooms in the open, attaining a height of five feet, with spikes twelve to eighteen inches in length. The numerous varieties which have made their appearance in this country during recent years have all been reared from seeds upon the continent.

NEW YORK.

The Christmas Market.

Estimates are sometimes accurate, but in the cut flower wholesale market "no one can tell what a day may bring forth." So the estimates of a week ago, founded on the opinions of the leading wholesalers, the promise of good weather and the excellent prices of the first of the week, proved to be above the actual facts. On Christmas eve there was a considerable slump. American Beauty specials, which started out boldly early in the week with a demand for $1.50 each went at $1, which was high water mark for about every first-class Beauty that was sold. Thousands of fine Beauties went at 75 cents and 50 cents. Values all along the line fell to about the averages of an ordinary winter Saturday.

The best Maids brought 15 to 25 cents, but the quantity commanding the top prices was limited, and the flood of pickled goods that did much to swamp the market was never more in evidence. Year after year the same old story is repeated. Experience seems useless as a teacher. Heinz, the pickle man, with his "57 varieties" never made a better record in a day. The result of it all is the dumping of thousands of dollars' worth of unsalable roses in the ash barrels, a fitting end to a system that is utterly without excuse, and that must be ended in some way, if the confidence of the wholesalers and the buying public is to be maintained.

Carnation novelties which were held for 25 cents were left till Christmas eve, when the bottom fell out of everything. The days of extravagantly high holiday prices are over. The sooner the growers realize this, the better for all concerned. The geese have all about been killed that laid the golden eggs. The retailers and the public have grown "foxy." The blooming plants have done the business. Hardly a plant, where the price was at all fair and right, was left in any store in the city. Even the little stores on the side streets shared in the demand for these and holly and Christmas greens.

The quality of the carnation shipments was superb; a finer lot of specials and novelties never came to the market, but the demand was below expectations and many were unsold. Lilies which were held at 20 cents fell rapidly to 12 cents and even then were uncalled for, as white goods were a drug. Stevia and mignonette were here in unlimited quantities, and they are here yet. Boxes of the latter in the cellars remain unopened. Even poinsettias are left over and unsalable.

But the greatest depression of all was in the violet market. The cause may be summed up in the one fact, as stated by one of the largest wholesale houses, "Three times as many as usual were sent and there was not one-half the regular demand." On Wednesday and Thursday alone, it is estimated, over two million violets were delivered to the New York wholesale trade. Nearly 400 boxes arrived on one train on Wednesday evening. At this writing, Monday evening, nearly, if not fully half a million are still in the boxes in which they arrived, unsold and unsalable.

To add to the trials and tribulations of the men who have built up a wholesale cut flower business, the weather on the day before Christmas and on Christmas, as well, was damp, disagreeable and discouraging, and its influence was depressing. The street merchants, the only possible outlet for the immense accumulations, were knocked out by the cold wave, which made outdoor vending impossible. New Year's prices will not be above the usual Saturday average.

In encouraging contrast to all this, the holly, wild smilax, green goods and plant men are jubilant. Everything went at good prices, nothing left over that will not go for New Year's. The clean sweep included the Christmas trees, so that the retailer at least finds compensation and cause for thankfulness. The bulb and seedsmen, too, have all made merry and in a wonderfully prosperous season find reason to rejoice and to look forward hopefully and in a conservatively optimistic mood to a Happy New Year.

Various Items.

Notwithstanding that it was nearly zero weather another new park was opened in New York on Monday, the Robert Morris property, and a tablet giving a history of the ground and mansion unveiled. It is on this property the celebrated Jumel mansion stands, which was used by Geo. Washington as headquarters in the campaign of 1776.

At the New York Botanical Garden the contract for the completion of the range of propagating houses has been awarded to Hitchings & Co., the amount appropriated being over $7,500. The work will be finished in the early spring.

C. W. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, has been on the sick list for a week, one of many suffering from severe colds, the result of the sudden cold snap, which pulled the temperature down to only 3 degrees above zero on Saturday morning.

Fortunately for the plantsmen and the retailers Old Boreas withheld his chilling blasts till every plant had been sold and delivered. In nearly every retail store not enough blooming plants were left to make a respectable window decoration for Sunday.

S. Jacobs & Sons, of Brooklyn, won their suit against Otto Grundemann, of Secaucus, for the erection of greenhouses, receiving a verdict for nearly the full amount of their claim of over $2,300.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to Charles Smith, of Woodside, in the loss of his mother, who died in England December 7, aged 78 years.

James T. Scott, formerly instructor at the House of Refuge on Randall's Island, will go on the road for the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown.

The Weathered Co., of New York, horticultural builders, has been incorporated in New Jersey, with capital stock of $125,000.

Martin Dengler, a gardener at the Fail estate, Hunt's Point, was run down by a railroad train and almost instantly killed. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

Christmas Trade.

The great day and the business it brings is once more past. We hope sincerely that the all-important factor, the weather, was more auspicious in most localities than it was here. There are a great many of our customers, perhaps the majority, who do their important and heavy Christmas purchasing several days ahead. Alfonso buys the seal-skin jacket for Darling weeks ahead, and Gladys buys the smoking jacket or box of perfectos and has them hid away for several days, but trifles like a pretty plant or box of flowers are often left till the last day and the last day with us was a sloppy, slippery, drizzling, wet and melancholy day, such a day as was admirably suited for stopping indoors.

The bulk of business done may foot up equal to last year. We shall be surprised if it exceeds it, and we expected more, for there are more people in the city to sell to. When I can get time to interview my brother florists I shall know more definitely. We already know that there are plenty of good begonias, azaleas, poinsettias and other flowering plants left for future sales. However, business for holiday festivities is by no means over yet and by the middle of January all these things may be disposed of.

In cut flowers there was a scarcity of nothing but good carnations. More of these could have been sold. The divine flower is taking its correct place and value and there is no fear of its toppling off the pinnacle it has reached. If it does not occupy the apex, it's very close to it. There were plenty of fine violets. On the whole, cut flowers were in rather better demand, compared with plants, than has been the case for the past few years. Of volume of business and prices I would rather have another week to report. Yet from the few heard of, and a feeling that we can't shake off, we are inclined to say it was rather a disappointing Christmas. The day itself turned out fine and pleasant and somewhat made up for the miserable condition of the elements on Christmas eve.

A Carnation Night.

At the February session of our club we are to have a carnation meeting, with an exhibition, essay by some expert, and discussion. We hope that some of those having varieties they wish to bring to notice or, what is of equal value, good standard varieties, will favor us with a few blooms. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Christmas Market.

Luck is with us, all right, for Old Boreas held his icy breath until the Christmas shipments were all under cover, although the cold wave overtook the local retailers before deliveries were out of the way. Zero does not facilitate handling flowering plants. In general, the retailers had a very good trade. Some did not do quite so much as last year, but others report larger sales and the total is probably not far away. They all had enough to keep going about all night on Christmas eve, putting up orders.

In the wholesale district things simmered down to an average in all the houses. It developed that long Beauties, which were expected to be among the most plentiful of items, became one of the scarcest. The market stiffened steadily, and on Thursday evening $15 per dozen was asked, if seldom paid, for the best stock. Liberty was far short of orders, and high prices were paid for stock which was really not in a condition to be worth the money.

Maids sold splendidly; that is, the better grades, 25 cents being obtained for some, but the small roses of whatever variety were very slow sale and the large proportion of this stock in nearly every shipment served to pull averages away down. Brides moved slowly, and it was necessary in most houses to mark them twenty to twenty-five per cent under Maids to keep them going. Carnot, Chatenay and Sunrise were all short of the call.

On carnations the market held up better than could be anticipated on Tuesday evening, when such large stocks were on hand. Fresh goods in the colors brought fine prices right through, but the unexpectedly large receipts had the effect of causing the wholesalers to put the knife deep into everything that bore the marks of age. White is not the Christmas color, and the Hills and all but the very fanciest whites suffered for the absence of color. One wholesaler, who probably handled as many carnations as any house, says he thinks, without having figured it up, that he made an average better than 5 cents on every colored carnation received during the week and hardly more than 3 cents on the whites. Several commission houses adopted the expedient of reporting sales separately on white and colored carnations.

When one gets around to the violets, it is a sad story to tell. There is very little shipping trade on violets, and by the time local buying began the accumulation was something tremendous. One house had not less than 50,000 on hand Thursday afternoon, practically all Campbell. Every large violet handler was choked up with them. Singles sold on account of their color. Considerable quantities of eastern violets, all Marie Louise, were received, fifty in a bunch, liberal count, and magnificent stock as compared with even the best Campbell. But even some of this was left over.

Cut poinsettias did not clean up. Valley was in large supply and so were Romans and Paper Whites. Sweet peas found little favor, and tulips on three-inch stems did not have great popularity. Large quantities of Sprengeri and asparagus sprays were sold.

Since Christmas.

All day Saturday the temperature was eight degrees below zero, which isn't good for business, but the market held firm. Receipts were light, although some of the violet growers had evidently spent their holiday picking to replace the stocks which went into the barrel. White has moved up into line with other stock. Beauties have eased off fully as much as anything, but all crops were cut close and New Year finds the market active. Local trade has improved, and out-of-town business is always brisk in holiday week, for so many young people are at home from school that it is a period of much social life. The cold weather still makes heavy wrapping necessary.

Various Notes.

Announcement is made that Charles W. McKellar will again engage in the trade on January 1, having bought the selling end of the business of John Muno. He has rented the room on the fifth floor of the Atlas block, where the recent flower shows were held and will carry a full line of florists' supplies, in addition to doing a commission business in cut flowers. H. J. Muno, who has had charge for his father, will remain with Mr. McKellar. Mr. Muno is considering several changes at his greenhouses for next year. He may plant it all to carnations or may put half in lettuce.

It behooves those who are known as the local violet growers, which includes those at Grand Rapids and other Michigan points, to go out in one corner of a cool greenhouse and take a serious think. Lady Campbell is grown by nearly all, but with very few is the quality sufficiently good to sell when there are even indifferent grades of Marie Louise to be had, or singles. The very large supplies of Louise in the New York market has led a number of the Hudson river growers to either take contracts to supply Chicago retailers for the season or to send consignments to commission houses. E. E. Pieser says, and he is in a position where he ought to know, that if our growers cannot do Louise as it is done in New York, they had better get out of the violet business, for eastern violets will soon drive Campbell clear off this market. But even the fancy eastern stock is not selling this week.

Peter Reinberg says he doesn't expect to add to his glass this year, but that he will rebuild a large section on the lines of the high houses put up last spring, where the stand of Beauties is now, he says, the best he ever had. The narrow pattern of Garland's iron gutter will be used again, on the high posts. Mr. Reinberg says Chatenay has been his money-maker this year. He is so well satisfied with his experience with Liberty that he will cut down his planting one-half next year.

E. C. Amling gives it as his opinion that as many carnations were handled at Christmas as in any previous year. One of his growers sent 17,000 blooms in good order.

The George Wittbold Company has an order for a decoration at Mandel's next month, for which they have bought 350 strings of asparagus. This ought to attract the attention of other State street decorators to this green.

C. L. Washburn says that the man who spends all his time in town may know that the lake breeze is chilly, but that he has no adequate conception of what an old-fashioned winter we are having. Out at the greenhouses all efforts are bent on keeping things warm. Five teams are hauling coal seven days a week at Bassett & Washburn's and Peter Reinberg says that forty-five tons a day are burned at his place even when the sun shines.

Some of the wholesalers had a pleasant holiday experience with a house in Texas which refused C. O. D.'s. But exchanges of confidences are steadily closing this market to those who do not deal squarely.

George Reinberg has 40,000 carnation cuttings ready to ship. He is going in strong on Lawson, not having been able to supply the demand last season.

The McCormick estate is adding about $10 a month to the rent of each of the wholesalers in the Atlas block, and there is debate as to whether or not cheaper quarters around on Lake street would not give just as much business.

Wietor Bros. are cutting a splendid, steady crop of carnations. They find Norway the most satisfactory of the whites, because of its superior keeping quality.

A. B. Everett suffered very heavy loss through the giving out of a boiler on the night of December 21.

Mr. McGill, of Barnard's, is suffering from the prevailing complaint of too much weather.

The West Park Commissioners announce that $150,000 has been appropriated for building a conservatory in Garfield park. The work will begin in early spring.

The society weddings are numerous and the fashionable retailers are having a good week.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is still handling quantities of very fine poinsettias.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held on January 6, when the holiday trade will be the subject up for discussion.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Everybody in the trade reports satisfactory Christmas business. Some of the larger West End establishment's reports were above expectations and we can safely say from all reports that this was the best Christmas in years in both cut flowers and plants. The wholesalers were busy all week with shipping orders and attending to the wants of the local florists.

The weather for delivering cut flowers and plants could not have been improved upon. The big snow storm and blizzard that came all of a sudden on Christmas afternoon found the florists all smiling, as everything was delivered and the empty wagons returning home. Most of the West End florists started the delivery of plants on Wednesday, which was a great advantage to both buyer and dealer. The demand for plants favored the bright colors. Poinsettias, Gloire de Lorraine begonias, colored primulas and dwarf holly trees sold well. Of these a fine lot were seen in the show houses of Weber, Waldbart and Ayers. The green trade was big, ground pine being very scarce. Holly was plentiful and mistletoe very fine. The demand for wreaths and wreathing was the best in years and almost everybody reports having sold out early.

In cut flowers there was a lively demand for almost anything of good quality and especially for roses and carnations. These were cleaned up early at exceptionally good prices and many more carnations could have been disposed of, for the supply was not near enough for the demand. Special Beauties were limited and commanded $12 per dozen at the wholesale houses. The $8 and $10 per dozen sorts were more plentiful than the specials and shorts at $2 to $4 per dozen sold out clean. Fancy Bride, Maid, Meteor and Gate brought from $12 to $15 per 100; Carnot $18; Perle $8 and $10. Of these Brides and Maids were most plentiful. The demand for white roses ran far below that for the colored roses. Carnations were fine in quality and fancy sorts commanded $12 per 100. The varieties that brought this price were Enchantress, Prosperity, Lawson, Gov. Wolcott, Queen Louise and Estelle. Good common stock went for $5 and $6 per 100. Very few were sold for less than $4; the supply was large but not near enough to go around. California violets were also limited and of very fine quality; $2.50 and $3 per 100 was asked for these, with clean sales all around.

Bulbous stock, as usual, sold somewhat slow, with plenty of it in the market for all demands, with no advance in prices. Romans and Paper Whites were $4 and $5 per 100 for choice stock, but the bulk went at $3 and $4. Valley, too, sold slowly at $4 and $5 and not of extra good quality. Choice mignonette sold at $5 and $6, with fair demand. Smilax and asparagus and all greens sold well at their usual price.

The market at present has again assumed a normal aspect, which will not change materially because of New Year's trade, as this holiday is not observed much by the flower loving public here. Stock is not over-plentiful and won't be for some time, with Christmas prices on most of the choice stock.

Christmas Retail Trade.

Among the retailers there is a general expression of satisfaction. In the West End Fred Weber, Theo. Miller and Kalisch & Sons say that their sales were materially larger than last year, with prices higher. Everything choice sold rapidly. The leading demand was for Beauties, violets and carnations. Their plant trade was the best in years and a big demand for holly and mistletoe.

On Grand avenue, George Waldbart, Mrs. Ayers and the Ellison Floral Co. report a big trade. Mr. Waldbart says everything sold out in plants and cut flowers in all classes. Mrs. Ayers and Mrs. Ellison have the same story to tell and are glad it's over.

F. H. Weber, at Maryland and Boyle avenues, had a big trade in everything. This was his first Christmas in business on his own hook.

Mrs. Newman also reports a big holiday trade, the best in years.

Henry Ostertag reports all the business he could get away with, and more too, for stock ran out.

C. Young & Sons Co., as usual, had a fine display of plants and cut flowers and their big force was kept busy at all times. Everything sold well at this place.

Miss Badaracco reports a very satisfactory trade in all lines.

At the Riessen Floral Co., Mrs. Buechel says that this Christmas beats all in the cut flower trade and they had to refuse orders that came in late.

The North and South End florists all had a good trade to report. The Eggeing Floral Co., on South Grand avenue, say they never had so much to do since they started in business.

Various Notes.

J. A. Evans, the ventilator man from Richmond, Ind., was in town with a force of men putting up his apparatus at the World's Fair grounds.

J. D. Carmody, of Evansville, Ind., looking finer than silk, spent Sunday in St. Louis, calling on friends on his way to Texas.

Arthur Y. Ellison is back from Butte, Mont., where he was with the State Nursery Co. Arthur says he will stay in town until after the World's Fair and will be employed by the Ellison Floral Co. He will also strengthen our bowling forces, being one of our best.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Herzog, who were reported sick in the last issue, have not improved much. At this writing Mrs. Herzog is somewhat better, but Max is still a very sick man. Pneumonia in both cases.

John M. Hudson, formerly in business here and well known in Philadelphia, had a paralytic stroke the past week, with very little hopes for recovery.

The Florists' Club meeting January 14, in the Odd Fellows' building, should not be forgotten by the members. A display of new carnations is promised and an interesting time is expected.

Bowling.

The florist bowlers were at it again on Monday night. Arthur Ellison, our old member, is again with us and rolled some fine games. The following are the scores made by the two teams:

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The weather which a kind Providence gave to us for our Christmas business, could not have been improved upon. The temperature was above freezing, so that no extra care in the delivery of plants and cut flowers was necessary. As a result our Christmas trade was the most satisfactory that we have had for many a year. Store men as a rule say that there is no money for them in any holiday business, owing to high prices and the fact that they don't have the time to give each order the attention it should have, resulting in many kicks and loss. But this year I have heard several of our leading retail florists say that they are satisfied that there is a balance on the right side.

It is yet a little early to state just how much of an increase there was over last year, but the fact that there was an increase is evident and everyone seems to have had his share. The wholesale houses did a rattling good business and by noon of Christmas day the majority of them did not have a flower of any description on hand.

As usual, Beauty headed the list and the supply was very large, but more could have been used. Medium grades especially were scarce. Meteor and Liberty were hard to find at any price. Other roses were about equal to the demand, but more first grade stock could have been handled to advantage.

It was expected that carnations would be very scarce, but many more were handled than was anticipated, there being almost enough to fill all orders. Altogether they sold for the highest average price ever obtained for this flower in this market.

Valley, Romans, narcissi, callas and Harrisii all sold first class and the quality of the stock was very good. There was a large supply of poinsettias but none too many. There were a few mums, some of them very good and all found buyers. To the surprise of all violets turned out to be somewhat of a drug and towards the end the price dropped considerably. Some fine Princess of Wales were handled and brought $3 per 100. This was a banner year for holly and the greatest portion of the stock received in this city was first class. Mistletoe, too, was fine.

At the present writing stock of all kinds is scarce and Christmas prices still hold good. Indications are that New Year's trade will be very good and that there will be none too much stock.

One noticeable feature of the Christmas trade was the small amount of pickled stock seen. It is needless to say that this was a very pleasant feature.

Various Notes.

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held a week from Saturday. Very few members attended the last meeting, owing to the severe weather.

At noon Christmas day the temperature was 40 degrees and at midnight it was zero, with a very high wind blowing. Considerable damage was done and many a florist about here spent a sleepless night.

Geo. J. Ball, with John Brod, Niles Center, Ill., was a visitor.

C. J. OHMER.

WHEATON, ILL.—D. F. Hawkes has been in very poor health this winter and unable to be about.

MARIETTA, O.—Rufus Turner, the manager of J. W. Dudley & Son's store here, has been dangerously ill in the hospital, but is now slightly improved.

SEDALIA, MO.—Holiday trade was very good, but Gelven & Son say that there was plenty of stock to fill all orders, including those from neighboring towns, while surplus stock was shipped to St. Louis.

AUBURN, N. Y.—George Dobbs & Son say trade was the best ever known at Christmas, stock plentiful, but good prices realized. The "Floral Store" started a year ago did an enormous business.

ESTERVILLE, IA.—On the morning of December 18 fire destroyed the residence and greenhouse of Mrs. H. A. Jehu, nothing being saved. The loss was about $2,000, with little insurance. The fire started through a defective heating system.

WINONA, MINN.—The Winona Floral Co. has taken a long-time lease on the Voelker greenhouses and has bought the stock. The plant will be operated in connection with the company's main establishment, their increased trade having necessitated enlarged facilities.

MANCHESTER, MASS.—Hermann Thiemann, for many years superintendent of the McMillan estate at Eagle Head, has an eighty-acre farm near Owosso, Mich., to which he will remove April 1, to engage in growing dahlias, peonies and other stock of like character.

SPRINGFIELD, O.—Incorporation papers have been taken out for the Aberfeldia Floral Company, capitalized at $10,000. The stockholders are George D. Leedle, Charles C. Leedle, C. P. Brunner, Herman Voges, Jr., and Forrest L. Wolfe. The company has secured a tract of eleven and one-half acres, with side-track facilities and will at once begin the erection of a modern greenhouse plant.

Vegetable Forcing.

STRING BEANS.

This crop is more often grown by the private gardener than by the commercial man and I am somewhat doubtful if the latter can make it a paying crop for forcing in winter, as it is hard to obtain the necessary price. The fact that beans can be shipped from a distance and be quite fresh at the end of the journey brings the southern-grown article into competition with the home product, and it stands to reason that they can be grown much cheaper in the open ground than under glass. Though the express charges run up the price of the southern article somewhat, still it is not enough to balance the price. Yet they can sometimes be worked in as a catch crop to fill up space, and where the grower is convenient to a good home market, where a first-class article is wanted, a sufficient price can be procured for them. It is a crop that is easily done and one that is little troubled by insects or disease. Red spider will sometimes make its appearance if the atmosphere of the house is kept too dry, but if this condition is avoided and the plants syringed frequently little trouble should result from this source.

We have tried several varieties for forcing, but find Early Mohawk the best. Some of the others may mature a little earlier, but this is the healthiest grower, freest and produces the largest beans, the quality being excellent. Raised benches suit the crop best, as they like a warm soil and need to be kept near the glass to encourage stocky growth. Any fairly good soil will suit them. We sow in rows across the bench, making the rows twelve inches apart, and place the seeds far enough apart so that no thinning will be necessary. But we always take the precaution of first testing the seeds to make sure they are good. The seeds are covered to about their own depth and the soil kept rather dry until they are well started. If kept too wet a good deal of loss would occur through rotting. After they are well under way a plentiful supply of water is needed. When the plants are in bloom it is better to withhold syringing, especially during dull days, to insure a good set. A night temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees, with a rise of 20 degrees by day, will bring them along quite fast enough, but to produce a good crop they must be kept growing right along and receive no check. About two good pickings is all that can be got off them, it being hardly profitable to keep them in to mature the few small ones that would be left.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

Another milestone passed in the florists' business! Another Christmas, with all its attendant worry and trouble. Christmas week opened mild and balmy and the growers were deluded into the belief that they would have nice weather for delivering plants, but by Tuesday noon Old Boreas was doing business as of yore. Christmas morning the thermometers registered as low as 10 degrees below zero with a strong northwest wind,

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I am pleased to announce that after January 1, 1904, I will reopen in the Wholesale Cut Flower and Florists' Supply business, having purchased the wholesale business of Mr. John Muno, at 51 Wabash Ave., Chicago (Atlas Block), where I have also secured additional storage room for supplies of all kinds and the manufacturing of Wire Work.

Mr. Muno will continue to ship his product to me, consisting of a full line of American Beauties, Fancy Teas and Carnations, which, together with shipment of miscellaneous flowers and Greens from other shippers will give me a complete line of both Cut Flowers and Supplies to furnish the trade promptly.

All outstanding accounts owing Mr. Muno should be made payable to Mr. John Muno, 51 Wabash Ave., care of Chas. W. McKellar. Mr. Henry Muno will remain in the employ of Mr. McKellar and city accounts can be paid to him personally.

Mr. Muno takes this opportunity of thanking the trade for the liberal patronage shown him and wishing the trade generally a Happy New Year, and hoping that during same at least a portion of your trade will be shared with the new firm, I am,

Very truly yours,

(Signed)

CHAS. W. McKELLAR.

making deliveries difficult and frozen noses prominent.

Business started in rather brisk, but dropped off somewhat later, so that aggregate sales were probably ten per cent less than a year ago. A prominent feature of this year's trade was the increased demand for holly wreaths, the ready sale of good blooming plants and the few complaints regarding prices. Buyers were satisfied to pay the prices, but bought more sparingly. Roses retailed at from $2 to $5 per dozen; carnations, 75 cents to $3; Beauties, $6 to $20; violets, $4 per 100; poinsettias, $5 to $8 per dozen. A few belated mums were seen, but there was little or no demand for them. Well grown plants sold at sight, also made up baskets.

Various Items.

Holm & Olson report good sales all along the line. They had fine azaleas and Begonia Lorraine. In cut roses some extra fine Ivory and Gates sold at $5 per dozen. They are getting extra nice stock from the Sherman Nursery Co., of Charles City, Iowa, including Maids, Brides, Perles, Sunsets and Beauties.

A. S. Swanson had nice araucarias, azaleas, oranges and peppers, besides the usual supply of good cut blooms.

L. L. May & Co. had extra fine cyclamens in pans and a choice assortment of made-up baskets, which went very quickly.

August Vogt reports very good sales in holly wreaths and greens and a splendid sale of violets. Charles Vogt reports the best sales on record. With plenty of good stock and plenty of help he did a very thriving business.

The Ramaley Floral Co. disposed of a car of Christmas trees, all being gone by the 23d.

R. C. Seeger had all he could attend to at his stand on Robert street, near Seventh. He has recently put in a handsome refrigerator, which improves the appearance of the place very much.

Otto Hiersekorn and E. F. Lemke both had good sales.

There was an abundance of holly and mistletoe, with some left over, but lycopodium was pretty well cleaned out, and there isn't a thousand yards of green left in the city.

Christmas Trade.

As I anticipated in my last letter, the volume of trade this Christmas was far in excess of last year, the most conservative estimate being from seventy-five to 100 per cent. This applies to nearly all the firms in the city. Carnations were of good quality and in quantity were just about equal to the demand, prices ranging from $4 to $8 per hundred wholesale and from 50 cents to $1.50 per dozen retail. Beauties were plentiful, especially in long stems, and quality excellent; prices $6 to $12 per dozen wholesale and they retailed at from 25 cents to $1 each. Meteors were in great demand and commanded prices ranging from $4 to $8 per hundred wholesale and from 6 to 15 cents each retail. Brides, Maids and other roses were from $4 to $8 per hundred, according to quality, and retailed correspondingly. Violets were of fine quality but the retail price of 40 cents per dozen scared off buyers. Poinsettias were in great favor and sold readily at 75 cents and $1 each. Azaleas, cyclamens, primroses, Gloire de Lorraine and Lilium Harrisii were in great demand and realized good prices.

The various flower stores were very tastefully decorated and attracted considerable attention. The Van Bochove's new store was elaborately done up for the occasion and had on sale some very fine specimens of Easter lilies and poinsettias, some of the bracts of the poinsettias measuring two feet across. The weather was favorable for safe transportation and delivery. General satisfaction reigns.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

L. L. MAY & Co., St. Paul, are mailing their 1904 catalogue.

VERY few 1904 retail catalogues have yet made their appearance.

E. H. VICK will start west shortly in the interest of Wm. Hagemann, of New York.

THE only thing that can be done is to make the best of the short deliveries that are being made.

SEVERAL sales of sweet corn are reported from St. Paul at prices ranging from $6 to $8 per bushel.

IT looks as though the difference between wholesale and retail prices will be smaller than ever during 1904.

THE Haven Seed Co., of South Haven, Mich., has been dissolved and will be reincorporated at Arroyo Grande, Cal.

THE same trouble is being experienced this year as last upon the appraisalment of foreign seeds. Vexatious delays are the result.

THIS season preference will be given to the orders from market gardeners and small consumers by many seedsmen who issue catalogues to the trade.

THE seedsmen who deal in Christmas goods report a fairly good trade. Some over-purchases of Christmas trees have lessened the profits in some instances.

A BALTIMORE seed dealer writes that the trade in general in that vicinity has not anticipated its wants in anything like as heavy quantities as a year ago.

THE Albert Dickinson Company will proceed at once with an investment of $80,000 in a seed warehouse on the tract of land recently purchased between Minneapolis and St. Paul.

ALFRED PLANT, of the Plant Seed Company, St. Louis, has passed his eighty-second birthday and spends much of his time at Webster Groves but he keeps well up on what is going on in the trade.

THE large jobbers report a very lively time at present. All customers are clamoring for shipments. It is slow work getting beans and peas in shape. Sweet corn that has been purchased hangs back remarkably. Foreign goods are being held up at the ports of entry. The railroads are willing to place cars on track but to get carloads of stuff ready under the circumstances taxes the facilities of the best of them.

BURPEE'S Farm Annual quotes Stowell's Evergreen sweet corn at $6.50 per bushel, but an insert states that "some thousands of the 'form' were printed, when an unexpected and unusually severe freeze injured a considerable portion of Stowell's Evergreen sweet corn, as it was not yet thoroughly cured. This reduces the supply to such an extent that we are obliged to advance prices to $2.00 per peck or $7.50 per bushel. Prices on other varieties remain unchanged." Cory is priced at $6.50, Crosby's Early at $6.50 and Country Gentleman at $9. Arlington White Spine cucumber is quoted at $2 per pound, and Jersey Pickle at $1.85, Livingston's Evergreen at $1.75.

THE St. Louis Seed Co., successor to the retail department of the Plant Seed Co., proposes to make florists' seeds and bulbs an important department. They had a big bulb trade this fall, but have a small stock of many varieties still on hand.

The business men of Dallas, Tex., are organizing a corporation for the purpose of distributing early maturing cotton seed among the farmers of the southwest. The belief is that in early maturity comes immunity from weevil and prosperity for the state.

BUT THEY DO.

The League of Wholesale Seedsmen protests against the distribution of seeds by the Agricultural Department to the farmers. They needn't worry; the seeds rarely come up.—New York Times.

But they do; just there's the trouble. So long as the Department was sending out stuff that was no good, no one cared very much, but now that as good seeds as any are being sent out, it cuts a big hole in the mail order and packet trade. In the cool of the evening one day last summer a well known seedsman not far from Chicago dropped in upon a distinguished jurist, who had recently become a relative by marriage, and found him taking exercise at work in as well ordered a little kitchen garden as one might ask, "the seeds all sent me by my friend, the congressman, you know." When the government gets to supplying seeds to the seedsmen's own relatives, what's one to do?

WE esteem the REVIEW very highly for its Seed Trade news.—BINGHAMTON SEED CO., Binghamton, N. Y.

HERE'S another dollar for the REVIEW, which we certainly cannot do without.—GELVEN & SON, Sedalia, Mo.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEB.

Trade in this city Christmas week showed an increase of fifty per cent over last year and a better understanding of Christmas prices than heretofore. As an afterthought the idea presents itself as to whether a neatly printed slip or card sent with each azalea, Lorraine or poinsettia giving briefly some of the things to do or not to do in order that the plants may remain in good shape as long as possible, would not be a practical and business proposition. Too often the day after Christmas or Easter some one will call up and complain that the azalea is all wilted or the flowers are all falling off, when a glance will show that the ball of roots is as dry as powder, or perhaps the plant is standing in a jardiniere or saucer of water. My trade is a trade which has not heretofore used much of this expensive stock and it seems to me that as a business policy the purchases should be made as satisfactory to the customer as possible. Would not this idea be as practical applied to the retail trade as to the wholesaling of rooted cuttings? I would like to hear what some of the older retailers think of the proposition.

H. H. COTTON.

ELKHART, IND.—Anna Schenk, of Garland, Ohio, and Clara Seibel, of Polk, Ohio, aged respectively 9 and 19 years, who were visiting here were fatally scalded by steam December 28, in a greenhouse boiler room.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Otis B. M. Felton, 75 years old, a florist of 330 North Sixty-third street, dropped dead in Odd Fellows' Temple, Broad and Cherry streets, December 23. Death came after he had made a jocose remark to Grand Scribe Hall, of Philadelphia Canton, No. 1, in the latter's office on the first floor. Heart failure is believed to have been the cause.

WE are great admirers of the REVIEW.—H. O. HANNAH, Sherman, Tex.

Christmas Trade.

Bright, sunny weather up to December 22 had a tendency to retard orders for Christmas flowers, but a slight snow-storm on that date brought the public to realize that Christmas was on hand and business became quite brisk. The day before Christmas was a record breaker in the plant department and those who had a limited amount sold out on the 23rd. Prices were no better than last year and in some cases not quite as good, especially on Begonia Lorraine, which in this dry climate has not given the best of satisfaction to the amateur as a house plant. All retailers have complained of the unsatisfactory results from handling Lorraines, which lose their attraction in a few days from store treatment. Stock of this plant was one month too early out here, consequently there was great loss from this cause.

While the cut flower trade was very satisfactory and probably equal to previous years, there was considerable stock left over, owing to the fact that the increase in supply was one-fourth over last year and no extra provision made for handling on a retail basis, but the commission house came to the rescue again and got rid of the surplus to a great extent by shipping to mountain towns. I think the prominence given plants, and their superior character as grown out here, lessens the sale of cut flowers somewhat, especially among the middle-class, who were formerly our best buyers and who now prefer an attractive plant, which has more utility and conveys the same sentiments, to the extravagant dozen of roses, which loses its beauty in a short time. The recent change in location of one of the prominent retail stores and the establishment of a new firm does not seem to have changed the business of the older firm to any extent, although the new firm reports a good trade, especially in plants and Christmas decorations.

GREAT DIVIDE.

Various Notes.

Christmas opened bright and pleasant, with all the florists as busy as could be. Take all of the different establishments, plants ran neck and neck with cut flowers. The main part of the trade came on the last two days. In regard to Christmas greens the florists all had their share and the holly in the hands of the florists was fine, with lots of berries. But this line of business is now mostly in the hands of the street vendors, who use an inferior article and sell much cheaper than the florist can afford to. In plants the leaders were poinsettias, azaleas, cyclamens and Begonia Lorraine. On the whole the demand this year was not so much for high priced plants as for those of medium prices. The supply was about equal to the demand. In cut flowers the leading call was for Beauties, roses, violets and carnations.

Lyle Waterbury, the commission man, reports good sales of all flowers, with especial call for Madame Chatenay roses and poinsettias, also quite a lot of late mums which went off in a hurry. He had large sale for red bells, etc. His greatest call was for carnations. Owing to labor troubles in the mountains the shipping trade of all fell off a good deal.

All the store windows were handsomely decorated, the most noticeable being the Park Floral Co. and the Scott Floral Co., especially that of the latter, which was in red effect, mostly poinsettias and the lights red to match. The Scott Floral Co. reports a great run on the Hunt Christmas bell of tissue paper rosettes and ribbon.

Emil Glauber brought in a fine lot of Chatenay roses and lily of the valley, which were good sellers.

Enchantress was decidedly the leader in carnations, the finest of them coming from Benson and Ben Boldt, of Daniels & Fisher, and Ben also had the best poinsettias in the market.

At the City Park they had, as usual, the finest bed of poinsettias agoing, but as they are not for sale they did not conflict with the market. The finest azaleas were from the Colfax Avenue Floral Co. and the Park Floral Co., but John Sked, of the Park Floral Co., led in cyclamen and Begonia Lorraine.

THORNE.

OMAHA, NEB.—Alfred Donaghue, Jr., opened his new store on Farnum street just before Christmas. It is a handsome establishment, with a conservatory in the rear and trade has started out very well.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.The Gardeners' Magazine.

NEW LILIES.—Though no particularly new lily has been brought prominently forward this year, no less than four have received either first-class certificates or awards of merit from the Royal Horticultural Society. This is in excess of many previous years, the general rule being one or two. Lilium auratum platyphyllum Shirley variety, which gained the higher award, is a very fine form of the broad-leaved variety of L. auratum, and in every way a striking lily. The absence of spots on the flowers is pronounced. L. Kelloggi, if exhibited as a hybrid between L. pardalinum and L. rubescens, would be regarded as strictly intermediate between its parents. L. elegans Peter Barr is one of the finest varieties of L. elegans. L. speciosum magnificum is in all probability an importation from Japan, and is certainly in every way a very fine lily. The color is a deep reddish-rose, with lighter tips, while the basal half of the petals is dotted with crimson.

ROSES.—With regard to the varieties of a rambling character that are suitable for the formation of pillars, I would suggest that less attention should be paid to Crimson Rambler. It is a marvelously beautiful rose, but it should not be grown to the exclusion of all other varieties of a similar character. Not only is variety desirable, but this old favorite appears to greater advantage when associated with others differing in color than when grown exclusively. I would suggest the following, with Crimson Rambler, as desirable where there is space for a few only: Blush Rambler, Dorothy Perkins, Debutante, Queen Alexandra, Perle des Neiges, Psyche, Sweetheart, Tea Rambler, Thalia and Waltham Rambler.

INTERESTING IF TRUE.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch of December 24 prints the following:

Back of the technical charge of petit larceny against Thomas Little, based on allegations of the theft of a pickax and shovel valued at $1.50 from Dr. O. F. Barnes, of 1431 North Newstead avenue, lies the more imposing charge of substituting poison ivy for smilax and miserable little tea roses for American Beauties in laying out front-yard flower gardens.

Little is a floriculturist and landscape gardener. Dr. Barnes charges that he gave Little a commission to arrange his flower garden and ornament it with beautiful vines and fragrant flowers, but that Little instead of planting smilax and American Beauties, planted poison ivy and tea roses. Then, he says, Little went away with the pickax and shovel.

It is charged that Little represented himself as the agent of a florist at Union and Spalding avenues. He is under arrest on a warrant charging him with petit larceny.

EVERY BUNCH of roses or flowers that goes out of your shop tied with the RIGHT RIBBONS is an advertisement of quality. Your roses and flowers will look better, therefore their value is enhanced.

Better value means better prices to you. This however at a less cost, for the RIGHT RIBBONS are better quality than the usual sort—dyed better, woven better, and cost more to make.

But—when you buy direct from a mill “you save all between profits.”

Christmas Trade.

Christmas trade was active and sales equal to, and with quite a few in excess of, last year. Transient trade was very light and consequently cash sales were not as good as last Christmas. The demand was for the better quality of flowers and plants; prices seemed to be no object if the quality was there. Very unfavorable weather conditions December 24 checked business to some extent with all. The Pittsburg and Allegheny market florists, who have their shops out in the open suffered considerably. The warm, balmy days of December 23, 24 and the morning of the 25th permitted the florists to make their deliveries without extra packing; the blizzard held off until Christmas night.

Stock was plentiful enough for Christmas; in fact roses were in big supply and quantities of the poorer qualities and unhealthy stock remained unsold on the hands of the wholesalers. Receipts on roses on Monday and Tuesday were larger than expected and again on Wednesday and Thursday they arrived in large quantities. Carnations and Beauties were in large supply and the demand was brisk.

Paper White narcissi and Roman hyacinths and red tulips sold slowly. The demand for violets and valley was heavy. Mignonette, sweet peas and white lilac sold only fairly well. Prices were lower than last year on tea roses and Beauties, while carnations sold at a better figure. The quality of much of the shipped stock was soft and salting was again noticeable on roses. Few of our local growers practice the hoarding up of stock until it is unfit for sale.

There was little business on Christmas morning and the Saturday following, the advent of a heavy snowstorm and cold wave which struck us Christmas night checking the demand for stock.

Various Notes.

The call for decorative greens was very good and everyone sold out fairly well. Holly of fine quality was plentiful and cheap. In large lots one could buy it at $2.50 per case.

A. M. Murdoch had an elaborate decoration at the Pittsburg Club on Christmas eve.

John Bader reports business very good and the demand for pot plants for Christmas is on the increase every year.

P. Maier brought in a fine lot of Proserpine tulips for Christmas.

Fred Burki's place, The Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co., was in full crop and their cut of Maids, Brides and carnations was immense. Undoubtedly the finest Maids and Brides in the market came from this place.

Lloyd Swarthout, of Washington, Pa., had a house of elegant poinsettias which came in just right for Christmas.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. received some fine Enchantress carnations from B. L. Elliott's Cheswick greenhouses.

Wm. Kroeck, our old friend Billy, reports good Christmas business.

Sidney Gibbs is shipping some very fine stevia to the Cut Flower Co.

Do not forget the next meeting of the Florists' Club Tuesday evening, January 5. It will be “rose night.”

G. A. McWilliams, of Natrona, left last Monday on a pleasure trip. Florida is his destination.

This year closed with better prospects than expected, and the trade outlook for the New Year is cheerful.

Hoo-Hoo.

DAYTON, O.

The trade in Dayton was all that could be asked or expected. All the florists had a fair supply of flowers. One florist handled seventy-five cases of holly in a retail way and made and sold over 4,000 wreaths. The Miami Floral Co. had a fine cut of roses and carnations of a good quality, they having the only wholesale place in the city, and the Dayton florists were very glad to be able to obtain such good stock delivered promptly, therefore not much shipped stock in our city this season. NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres. F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Senger, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE Irrigon Nursery Company has been incorporated at Portland, Ore., with $5,000 capital, by John W. Cook, Alfred Goss and R. B. Leonard.

THE proposed work on the lake front at Chicago, or Grant park, as it is now known, will take three years and great quantities of nursery stock of sizes for immediate effect will be required.

PROF. L. H. BAILEY has an article on peach farming in Michigan in Country Life for January, which it would be worth while for nurserymen with trade in that section to place in the hands of their customers.

THE Oklahoma State Nursery Co., Perry, Okla., has bought a farm near Guthrie, where Manager C. C. Alling says they will at once plant large quantities of fruit trees and build a packing shed with side track connections.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT will lay out a large public park on the bank of the Hudson, north of One Hundred and Eighty-second street, New York, and dedicate it to the memory of his father. The work will include extensive plantings of trees and shrubs.

THE Association of Economic Entomologists, the Association of Plant and Animal Breeders, the Society of Horticultural Science, the Society for the Promotion of Agricultural Science and the American Microscopical Society meet at St. Louis at the same time next summer. Surely something ought to come of it.

SPRINGFIELD, O.—Word comes from the south that the new concern recently organized here has secured a tract of 3,000 acres of land near Tutwiler, Miss., on which they will engage in the nursery business and in flower growing. The promoters of the scheme are John M. Good, L. Verney, C. T. Ridgely, Edwin S. Houck, C. W. Welsh and L. P. Jop, all of this city.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA.—Announcement is made here that the big nursery of Stark Bros., at Lilly Flagg station, seven miles south of this city, will shortly be removed to Farmington, Ark. The present location of the nursery is said to be very unhealthy, in fact, so much so that white labor cannot be kept there. The Lilly Flagg nursery embraces about 700 acres and a great deal of money has been spent in getting it established.

PACIFIC COAST.

CHRISTMAS BERRIES.

It would be almost impossible in this day for Californians to celebrate Christmas and New Year's without the assistance of our beautiful so-called California holly. We have nothing to take its place as a decorative material that is purely a home product. It is sold by the thousands of bunches daily on the streets and handled by tons in the florists' stores. And yet it is only within the last ten years that it has been gathered and sold, and with many hundreds of people it forms the principal source of income during our winter months. Strictly speaking, it is properly called Heteromeles arbutifolia and the berries are borne in immense clusters of a bright cardinal red. The shrub grows to a height of twenty-five feet in sheltered locations although from ten to twelve feet is its usual size. The flowers come in clusters, small, white, and with a spicy odor in July and August and the berries appear about a month later.

They are generally ripe about Thanksgiving and then the marketing begins. The stems are broken off about a foot in length and packed tightly in boxes, care being taken that the berries do not rub against the boards. Our finest quality comes from the interior mountain valleys, where they are not subjected to too much fog, those on the coast being smaller in size and inferior in color. The ruling price is $40 per ton, wholesale, and some florists in San Francisco use as much as ten tons during the holiday season. This year has been an exceptionally good one for berries, as we have not had over two or three nights' frost thus far and the berries are at their best. The street vendors, of whom there are hundreds here, tie the berries in small bunches and sell them at the uniform price of 10 cents.

The berries are found growing wild in California from San Diego on the south to Mendocino on the north and are not of natural growth, either in the northern part of California or in Oregon or Washington. The tree makes a handsome shrub in cultivation but is of somewhat slow growth. It has much of the characteristics of the strawberry shrub (Arbutus unedo) and is our most valuable wild flower. The wild pigeons are very fond of the berries and when they are perfectly ripe they eat them greedily so that by the end of January they have generally all disappeared. The berries have a rather pleasant taste, somewhat acid and astringent and are eaten by the Indians with great relish. The Spanish Californians used them in the preparation of a very agreeable drink. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

All our San Francisco florists have had an extremely busy Christmas. Up to Wednesday evening the prospects were none too bright, but Thursday eclipsed all expectations and we are all satisfied. I have spoken with a score of our principal retailers within the last twenty-four hours. Our weather is beautiful, bright, warm days for the past week, and winds somewhat to the north, but plenty of dust flying. Our nights have been somewhat cold, but not enough to interfere with outside chrysanthemums thus far. Trade seemed to be divided among all classes of stock about evenly, although I do not think palms sold as well as in former years. Some good azaleas, poinsettias and Lilium Harrisii were exhibited by our larger dealers, but the showing of all kinds of pot stuff was hardly up to the mark and the public generally confined its purchases to cut flowers.

Owing to our extremely warm weather for the past two weeks the supply of greenhouse stock, with the exception of roses, has been more than equal to the demand, and the prices have suffered in consequence, but within the past forty-eight hours, owing to the almost unprecedented demand, the wholesalers raised their prices about 200 per cent. Violets are still very scarce and they are being sold wholesale today at $2 per dozen bunches, and only a fair supply at that price. American Beauty roses sold at from $3 to $5 per dozen; Brides and Maids at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen; Testout, Kaiserin and Liberty at from 75 cents to $1.25 per dozen. This you will notice is considerably more than the quotations I have been sending recently, but it merely shows how a spurt in business will raise prices. With carnations the same rule has applied, although there was not so much difficulty in getting supplies. Any sort brought 35 cents per dozen, no matter how small the flower or how weak the stem, and such sorts as Lawson, Crocker, Estelle and Triumph sold anywhere from 50 cents to 75 cents per dozen. A few fancy sorts, including Prosperity, Cressbrook and some of Siever's varieties sold at from 75 cents to $1 per dozen. As the weather is particularly favorable, however, I look for these prices to lower somewhat in the near future.

Poinsettias were in good demand and could be handled by the retailers at a handsome profit. Many we received from Los Angeles and delivered in good order and cost the stores not over $1.75 per dozen. They could easily be retailed at from 25 to 50 cents each, and were a money-making proposition. They are grown outside in southern California and, as we are only a few hours distant, it was no trouble getting them in good order. Those sold in pots were home-grown, and wholesaled at from $6 to $9 per dozen. The retailers asked from $1 to $2 each in the stores and there were not nearly enough to go around at those prices. Valley, Romans and primulas in pots and pans sold well, but ferns and palms were not in such demand as I have seen them in former years. Some daffodils of the single yellow variety were eagerly bought at $1 per dozen blooms.

Red berries and California grown English holly are in evidence everywhere and eastern holly was handled by many of the dealers. The trouble with eastern holly is that it costs in expressage to San Francisco $8 per case, and the original cost of $4.50 being added, makes it foot up $12.50, which is a big price to pay for that article.

Many of our largest florists closed their doors early Christmas to get a chance to catch up with orders and I think I am safe in saying that the Christmas of 1903 was the best day for business that either the growers or retailers have ever had.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

State of Trade.

Christmas trade was good and lots of plants in bloom were sold. Some very fine Gloire de Lorraine were to be seen and sold well. Prices ruled about the same as last year, no increase whatever. Lots of holly was sold, but very cheap. The florists here have a lot to contend with. The peddlers will make holly up in wreaths and sell them at 15 cents, or two for 25 cents. The weather the day before Christmas was all that could be desired, but on Christmas night a very dangerous storm swept over our city. The wind blew at the rate of sixty-five miles an hour, but no damage was done to any of the greenhouses.

Various Items.

Jacob Schulz made a very handsome display at his store on Fourth avenue for Christmas, and reports a very satisfactory Christmas trade. F. Walker & Co., across the street, had all they could attend to.

Nanz & Neuner's window was ablaze with Christmas bells and some very fine Begonia Gloire de Lorraine.

Mrs. C. B. Thompson made a fine display of ferns, palms and blooming plants for her trade.

Jos. Coenen & Co. are smiling all over, and they ought to be, as they sold all their big ferns for Christmas.

J. E. Marret and E. G. Reimers each did a fine business for Christmas.

Louis Kirch, of Milton avenue, has two houses devoted to carnations and one house is planted in Norway and Queen Louise which are hard to beat around here. The plants are healthy and in fine growing condition. The other house is planted with Crane and is also very fine. Louis was married a while ago and he has built a very handsome residence.

C. H. Kunzman, of the West End, has put in a new Burnham boiler.

Henry Fuchs is building a new residence at his place.

Adam Heitz has bought a piece of ground near his place for $1,250.

H. LICHTFELD.

SABULA, IOWA.—On the night of December 20 fire destroyed the residence of Wm. B. Lovell and all its contents, the family having barely time to escape. The greenhouses were saved.

DALLAS, TEX.

The Market.

Another Christmas rush has passed and the florists have a smile on their faces that denotes satisfaction, as far as business goes, but a tired set were they when they closed the doors of their stores at noon and hung out the card "sold out" to greet the belated buyer. All flowers brought good prices. Bulbous stock was none too plentiful, and Romans and narcissi sold readily at $1 per doz. Holly was in good supply and poor, but was readily sold. Mistletoe was on all corners and could be bought at any price you wanted to pay. I never saw it finer than this season. Christmas trees were on sale at all corners and while it looked as if the supply was ahead of the demand, there was a clean market before night.

Flowering plants were scarce and what few were to be had were soon disposed of. The supply of palms and ferns was good and they found a good sale, for those wanting flowering plants had to fall back on these and the supply was well disposed of.

Notes.

E. H. R. Green, the railroad magnate, of Terrell, is putting up a large range of houses for growing cut flowers for the southern trade. He will erect some twenty large houses, all of modern construction. He will also have a government experiment station. He has several hundred acres of rich, loamy ground and an abundance of good water. Mr. Green has the capital and push to make this the best plant in the southwest, and there is surely an opening here for several more good wholesale establishments of this class.

F. W. Beach, late manager of the Haskell Avenue Floral Co., has resigned his position, and will take a few days of rest before locating anew. B.

The Best Bright Pink
Carnation in Sight...
It Never Bursts.

This will be sure to become a standard commercial variety on account of its fine color, good form, size, stem and floriferousness. Nothing we have ever had on our place could touch it in blooming. Every shoot a flower stem and never off crop. Stands a foot above Lawson throughout the season and is easy to manage. The color is much brighter than Joost but not so dark as Lawson in the dark days of winter. It keeps its bright color.

Come and see it growing.

FLAMINGO

The finest scarlet carnation ever introduced. Brilliant color; large, fine flower; fragrant; great keeper; long, stiff stems early, free, continuous and ideal in habit.

ALBATROSS

The whitest of the whites. Early, will produce fine flowers in the field. A constant bloomer, never produces a weak stem, strongly clove scented. A most extraordinary keeper, a business carnation, a money-maker.

SUNBIRD

The strongest, most vigorous and most prolific of the yellows. Beautiful form, large flower, stiff stems, as free as any variety, is universally admired and sells readily.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

Business since Thanksgiving has been fair or rather quiet for the season. There has been a good supply of everything except red roses. The Christmas trade was very good. Blooming plants sold best, next berried plants, such as ardisias, oranges, etc. There was a good demand for holly and greens, also red bells. The cut flower demand was up to the usual standard. The weather was perfect for delivering. Good Brides and Maids brought $8 to $15 at wholesale, $3 a dozen retail. Good colored carnations brought $4 to $5 per 100 wholesale and $1 per dozen retail. Fancy carnations were $1 per dozen wholesale and $2 retail. Violets were a glut at the last moment. Most of the stock arrived in good shape, as the crop was off with a good many growers. Some carnations showed the effects of being salted. The violet growers had been holding off since Thanksgiving and came to the front at the last moment with, "How many do you want, $1.50 per 100?" Some had the nerve to ask more.

Notes.

Thomas Curley had a fine lot of poinsettias to cut.

F. Macrea & Sons had a merry Christmas with chrysanthemums.

J. Wood made a great showing of red bells and immortelle designs.

T. Keller's father is visiting him, after a number of years' absence. He helped Tom out in the rush.

T. J. Johnston had a great showing of fruited and blooming plants, with polished oak tubs with brass fittings to set them off.

O'Connor did a land office business, working day and night.

T. R. Peterson reports good trade.

John Macrea's Lorraine begonias were little beauties.

J. A. Budlong & Sons' big cut of roses and carnations all went to the Boston market. R. I.

WILLIAM SCOTT

Price, $5.00 Carriage Prepaid.

Florists' Publishing Co., CANTON BUILDING, Chicago.

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review), and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopedia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is

A Complete Reference Book for

and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

The Christmas Market.

Another Christmas has gone into history and it goes on record as a satisfactory one in general for the florists' trade. The Christmas price lists were sent out earlier than usual and buyers were more prepared in booking orders, and there was less complaint on the advanced charges. Shipping trade was fine, but the demand was principally for colored carnations and red roses. Good Crane, Lawson, Lord and Marquis went at $8 per hundred and other varieties according to grade. Roses sold well; even white was cleaned up. They ranged from $8 to $15 per hundred for shipping stock, according to quality. There were plenty of smaller flowers, such as Romans, valley, Paper Whites, and stevia, to go around without any advance in price. Violets sold well at $2 per hundred. The quality of stock in general was above the average, and no pickled stock was on the market.

The plant sales were fully fifty per cent ahead of last year, principally due to the excellent weather and the fine supply on hand. C. C. Pollworth Co. had a choice lot of azaleas and poinsettias which sold all right. There were also a lot of cyclamens, primroses and Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in the market.

Notes.

Currie Bros., M. A. McKenny & Co., Kapsalis & Lambros and J. Fox, the East Side florist, all had fine window displays which brought in many doubtful buyers.

Wm. Edlefsen and Mrs. Baumgarten, on the West Side, displayed a fine lot of blooming plants in great variety.

The demand for holly was larger than ever and more fancy stock could have been sold had it been available the last day.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The weather for Christmas was ideal and the trade was all that could be expected. The retailers were well supplied with first-class stock, and all report the best Christmas they ever had. Beauties were enough for all orders and good ones, too. Brides and Maids were equal to the demand, although some were very soft and lacked that crispness which is a large part of the value. Carnations were in great demand and better ones were never seen. Prices were the best ever realized in this city. Violets were hardly called for.

Poinsettias were in greater demand than in any previous year, and the trade was well stocked with them, but Christmas day saw the last. Begonias sold well in all sizes. Azaleas were better than previous years, and sold well at 200 per cent profit. Cyclamens were not so large as usual, and quite a few were left over. Primulas sold well and a great many were seen in pans.

J. N. Champion Co. made a specialty of large fancy baskets trimmed with ribbons and filled with Lorraine begonias, ferns, poinsettias and Pandanus Veitchii for the center. These baskets sold readily at from $10 to $15 each.

Roping and wreaths were in excess of the demand, and plenty of each were left over.

Christmas bells sold well and the new folding bell was a great seller. The chimes sold as a novelty and took the eye of the public at large; still the old immortal bell holds its own.

Novelties in Carnations.

We desire to call particular attention to the following novelties, each of which the most critical growers agree is a great advance over older varieties of the same color:

FLAMINGO. Finest brilliant scarlet yet introduced. Large flower, grand stem, early and continuous bloomer.

MRS. M. A. PATTEN. Finest variegated, will supersede Bradt, which it will out-bloom two to one. Better in stem and more pleasing variegation.

WHITE LAWSON. True sport of Lawson and like it in every respect except that it is pure white.

DAHEIM. Extra fine crimson variety, fully as large as Lawson. Grand stem, brilliant color, ideal habit, early bloomer. Will supersede other crimsons.

Price of above Big Four, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. There is sure to be a large demand; orders filled in rotation; it will pay you to book orders without delay.

BEGINNINGS

THE PILLOW.

Filling the Frame.

The first step in making a funeral design is to fill the frame. This requires two materials, lining for the frame, and moss for the filling. The best lining now in use is common fern leaves. Lay a thick mat of wood ferns all over the inside of the frame, not forgetting the sides and corners. A part of this lining is shown in the first illustration. The process of design construction is shown here, each stage occupying a section of the design frame. Tin foil is no longer the best appearing nor the most economical lining. If used as lining for good work it must have a green covering on the back, while the ferns serve both purposes at once.

After laying in the lining, fill the entire inside of the frame with sphagnum moss which has been soaked in water from twenty to thirty minutes, and wrung out tightly enough to prevent dripping. This moss is sold in bales by all florists' supply houses. Fill the sphagnum in snugly, especially in the corners and edges, level with the top edge of the frame. To secure moss from falling out in case the design is turned upside down, as often happens in shipping, lace hemp twine across the top of the frame, tying with a hard knot to the wire. The twine wrapping shows over the empty part of the frame and the panel of fern lining in the illustration. Having caught in all the loose ends of the sphagnum and tucked them out of sight inside of the frame, we are ready for the construction of the design florally.

Stemming the Flowers.

There are many styles of arrangement for a pillow, but all things considered, it is thought best at this time to use the solid carnation background as a model here. A beginner should have learned to stem before attempting the construction of a design. If not, here is the process of stemming carnations for background work: Have at hand as tools a strong pair of shears that will cut heavy stems, wire and soft wood; two or three grades of fine wire, soft wood toothpicks, and some invisible hairpins. In the wire have at least Nos. 24 and 36. Some florists use tweezers, but they are scarcely needed for ordinary work. Fingers are as good and cheaper. Shorten the carnation stems to within half an inch of the calyx and cut off one-fourth of the length of the toothpicks. A handful can be cut at once with the heavy shears. Insert a three-quarter pick in each carnation, from the top down through the heart of the flower and through the calyx, till it emerges parallel with the stub of the stem, the point being at least half an inch below the end of the stem. The blunt end will be out of sight in the heart of the flower. Put all the carnations to be used for background work through this process at once. The carnation, by the way, is the only flower to be stemmed in this way, with the pick inside the flower.

Next cut some No. 36 wire into six-inch lengths, and carry a bunch between the thumb and first finger of the left hand. With the right hand wrap the carnation flower tightly to the pick, using a single strand of wire from the bunch. Let the wire wrapping extend from about half way up the calyx nearly to the end of the pick. Be careful to catch in the lower end of the carnation stem exactly at the point, so that it cannot stop the newly stemmed flower from being pressed quickly into the sphagnum. Learn well the mechanical parts of the work. Aim at accuracy and neatness first. Speed will develop with practice.

Construction.

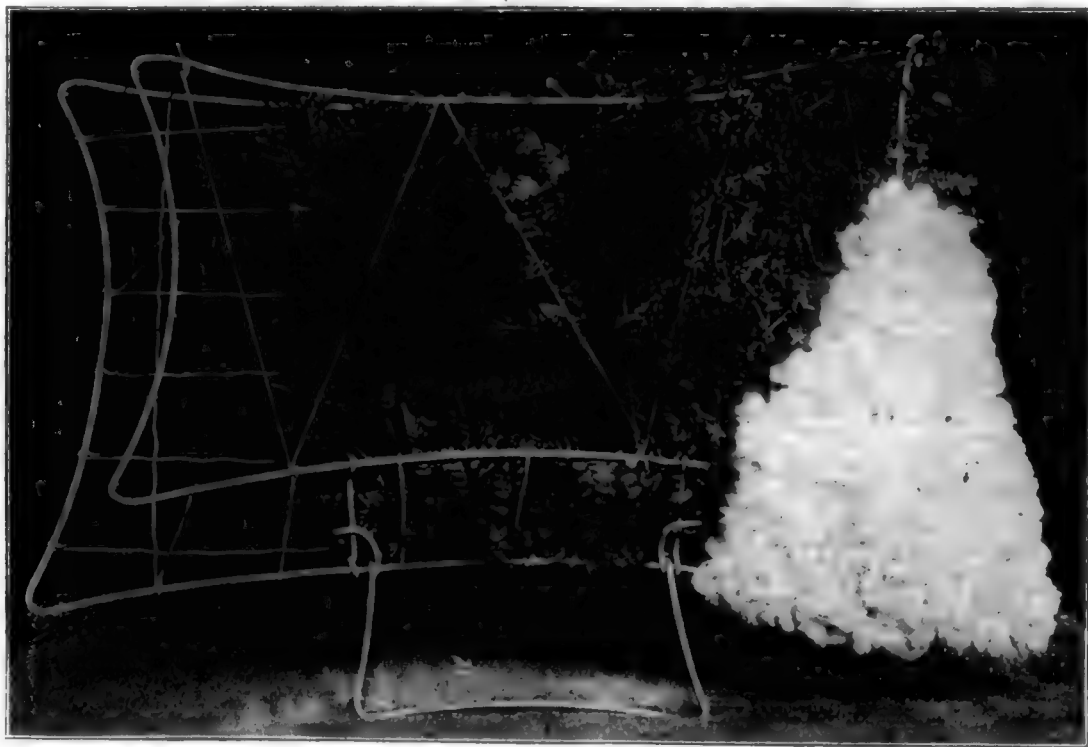

Having stemmed all the carnations needed, allowing one small carnation to each square inch of space, or one large carnation to each two inches, fill is the habit of many florists to edge all designs with smilax. But the solid carnation finish is a change, and therefore commendable. If smilax is used, cut a string equal in length to the distance around the pillow frame. Where the smilax follows the corners, tie it on with a fine wire, and trim off the ends so that the fastening cannot show. We now have a strictly outlined design with a smooth white background. This finishes the mechanical part, except the stemming of the flowers and green to be used in trimming, and the lettering.

Lettering.

The lettering can be made in flowers on a large enough piece. Violets are the best flowers, but carnations will do for a short name. In all cases where lettering is used there must be a sharp contrast between the color of the letters and the color of the background. Of the manufactured materials for lettering, chenille is commonly used. The most serviceable colors are purple, white, blue and red, in silk and wool. Silk is softer looking on the flowers, but will not stand moisture. The wool is coarser, but more durable. It is all wired, and can be bent in any shaped letter, and cut with the shears. Press the letters down flat against the background, and pin them through the carnations firmly with invisible hairpins or tiny staples made from No. 24 wire. Immortelles, if used for lettering, should be stemmed and inserted individually. Then there are many made-up letters and words with pins, to be had.

Lettering is usually set on in panels straight across the pillow. If the name in the background by inserting the stemmed carnations straight into the moss, and close enough together to hide the sphagnum. The lower right hand corner of the pillow in the first illustration shows this process. Cover the corners carefully, and extend the carnation background over the back edge about an inch, to add depth and thickness to the piece. This needed appearance of depth is peculiar to the pillow. Most other pieces, especially those of outline character, would be made too heavy looking by this treatment. It is long, a diagonal panel from lower left to upper right hand corner, gives more room, and makes the pillow look larger. So far as the artistic value is concerned, lettering is no addition, but precedent demands it, and good sense permits its use within reasonable limits. The legends, "Rest" and "At Rest" have no business on a pillow. If the whole appearance of the pillow itself does not suggest restfulness, it is a failure. Exclude, if possible, from being inscribed on a pillow, or any other piece, any word or initial indicating the donors. That should appear on a card which accompanies the piece.

Trimming.

We are now ready for the delightful part of the work, where the talent for design will begin to assert itself. There is nothing prettier for the top of a pillow than a spray, more or less elaborate, according to the space. But if no more than half a dozen roses are used, the spray can be just as graceful as if half a hundred were used. Short, slender-stemmed roses will do very well. Their pliability is a virtue. Very decidedly in these, and to some extent on all so-called straight stems, there is a curve or a turn toward the top of the stem that marks the character of any one flower as an individual, or we might say, as a unit of ornament. Cut the stem of a rose in a wrong place and you have destroyed its individuality, and made it indeed a stiff, deformed thing. A little study will make it easy to find these personal traits, these points where one flower differs from every other flower of its kind. To be able to discover these individual peculiarities first, and second to combine the different individuals in their proper relations, is the sum and substance of floral art. If one can grasp these basic principles as a foundation, he will save himself much labor in later years, trying to get to the bottom of things.

Study the lines, curves and turns in each flower. Some bend one way, some another; some nod, some look up, some twist around themselves. Those that curve toward the right we will select this time for our spray around the name on the pillow. Those that incline in the opposite direction will do for a branch spray, and the heavier, larger flowers will form the base of the spray.

In the second illustration there are a number of roses selected at random for the sphagnum, till the upper end of the toothpick disappears. Observe that the pick, as it carries the roses for the spray into the sphagnum, is inserted at an angle of about 45 degrees to the surface of the pillow. This places the roses in easy positions on their sides. Where the spray is elaborated with one or more branches, be careful to keep the main part the larger, and trace all branches to the one source.

Add some delicate green, stemmed as the roses are, keeping it in line with the spray lines of the roses. To hide the part of the wire-stand visible in front, fasten part of a string of separated smilax on the right side of the frame, and train from that point over the right hand corner of the pillow, and in the opposite direction across the frame, fastening with No. 36 wire.

Material.

Almost any kind of flowers handled in stock may be used on a pillow. Where to use them, and how, is where to exercise the care. Only a few are suitable for backgrounds, but some one or two of them are in season at all times of the year. For ordinary uses this must be a double flower like the aster, carnation, or chrysanthemum, and of even top surface and one color; that is, each flower should be a solid color. Some asters and chrysanthemums when opened fully, show considerable yellow center. These are not suitable for background work. The yellow centers here and there make the surface look patchy. The background should be either one solid color, or regularly shaded from dark to light. But don't attempt to shade without having intermediate colors, as well as tints and shades of the color. Pansies and violets are among the single flowers suitable for backgrounds. A pillow of violets with lighter flowers as trimming makes a sumay be used for trimming, as the roses are used in the pillow illustrated. The single radiate flowers, such as daisies and cosmos, do not appear to advantage here.

There are many styles of arrangement for a pillow, especially with the solid background style, for with that construction one is free to use any design on top without interfering with the definite outline of the piece. A crescent wreath of roses around the name is made in the same way as this spray. A delicate veil of asparagus or adiantum can be thrown over the whole. Vertical panels of fine green, borders of small flowers are popular.

The ideal pillow is deep, light appearing, soft and restful. It should be very neat, yet easy and free, with a certain sense of symmetry to the finished piece.

Propagation by Grafting.

This method of propagation as compared with propagation by cuttings, seems at first sight irksome and difficult. Those who have had no experience in this class of work are usually a little afraid to make a trial, the bugbear of failure being ever present in their minds. To the European trained florist whose curriculum embraced all the different methods of grafting a dissertation on this subject may seem a waste of space, but to the majority of the American trained whose knowledge consists of what he may have been able to pick up by accident or absorb from his environment an article on this subject given from a practical standpoint has quite a different value.

Grafting operations usually begin in January and are continued by some growers even as late as May, but the most successful batches are produced from the middle of January to the middle of March, as during that period we have more control of conditions as regards temperature, moisture and shading than we can have when the season is further advanced.

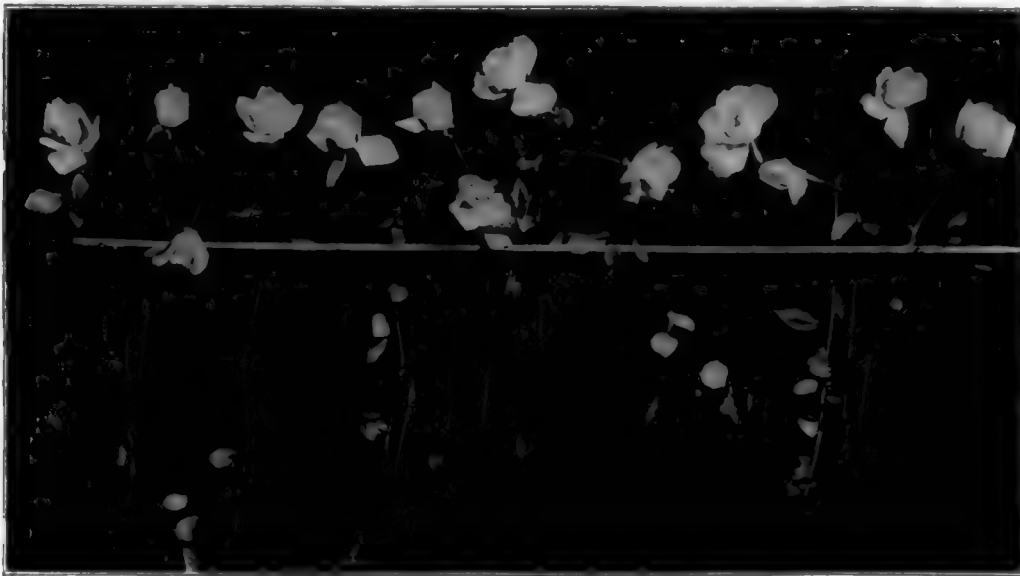

The Grafting Frame.

The first essential towards successful grafting is to have a good frame or pit in which to place and care for the newly grafted stock. This can easily be converted out of an ordinary bench by boarding up the back and front, so as to conserve the heat, much in the same way as we make a propagating bed out of an ordinary bench when pressed for room, but to get full benefit it must be as airtight as possible.

There should be sufficient piping to insure at all times a bottom temperature of 75 or 80 degrees. The boards of the bottom should, if possible, be at least fifteen or eighteen inches above the piping and have a covering of loose ashes at least one inch deep, on which to place the plants. The glazed sash should be high enough to give the plants ample headroom.

The Style of Graft.

Many are the styles of grafting recommended, but as expediency and speed are the principal objects to be attained, nearly every propagator has his own, usually being the one at which he is most expert. Whip and splice grafting in various forms, with or without the tongue, being by most experts considered the the study of individuality. Their decisive curves are placed just above the horizontal line. Right there is the point where they may be safely cut, and still retain their grace. After cutting each flower at its decisive point, stem the lower end on a whole pick, wrapping as in the case of the carnations. If roses have large or abundant foliage, take off part of the leaves. One will naturally give the spray the direction of the lettering. Insert the stemmed roses through the carnation background into perb piece. Very much the same effect in color can be obtained with dark pansies carefully shaded.

Roses are not at all suitable for backgrounds, with the possible exception of Clothilde Soupert. Even that variety is too soft and frail. Lilies may be used as trimming with good effect if the pillow is twenty inches or over. Swainsóna, valley, Roman hyacinths, freesias, and other delicate bulbous flowers, violets, chrysanthemums, asters, and, in fact, almost any other ordinary flowers most expeditious, is that in most general use for indoor grafting.

The manual part of this operation, while being quite simple, is rather difficult to describe, a very short object lesson being of more importance than columns of descriptive matter. The fundamental principle pertaining to all styles of grafting is the necessity of having a direct communication between the layers of inner bark in all the parts to be united, as without this a perfect union cannot be effected. The woody parts of the stock and scion never unite but are usually so covered up by the outer growth that unless the parts are dissected it is never discovered. If this principle is attended to the style of grafting may be varied at pleasure with the same assurance of success.

A well sharpened knife is one of the first requisites, as a clean cut will unite much sooner than one made with a dull knife. The scion should be tied firmly but not tightly in its place, with some soft tying material that will not cut into the bark.

The Manetti stocks should be brought in and placed in the bench some time previous to grafting, so that root action may be started, thus giving a supply of sap for the immediate support of the scion, but not left long enough to cause the eyes to break. The scion should be of the same quality of wood as that used for cuttings and should be selected with the same critical care.

Air and Temperature.

Immediately after the scion is attached they should be replaced in the frame, syringed and the sash closed tightly. The case should be kept closed for the first ten days, opening it only for a few minutes morning and night to dry off the superfluous moisture and to change the air. As soon as union has taken place they should get a little ventilation, which should be gradually increased, a careful watch being kept to prevent wilting. In about three weeks from the time of grafting, if all conditions have been right, they can be removed to the open bench, where a temperature of 60 degrees is maintained, and given a light shade on very bright days for a week or so, until they are hardened off, gradually reducing the temperature till it drops to 56 degrees.

In syringing they require more care than stock on its own roots, as the scions are liable to get detached if too much force is applied; otherwise they can receive the identical treatment as own-root stock.

From time to time they should be looked over and any suckers from the stock removed, as they, if allowed to remain and develop leaves, being nearer the source of supply, soon deprive the scion of nourishment.

The Manetti, possessing vigorous root action, will require careful attention as regards potting so that they may not become pot bound, which causes the stock to ripen prematurely and acts as a check upon the sap supply, upon which the life of the scion depends. RIBES.

LONDON FLOWER MARKET.

The flower market for Christmas is thus reported by the Gardeners' Chronicle:

For cut flowers, though supplies were plentiful, there was a general advance in prices. Lilium longiflorum and arums or callas were fetching from 5s. to 6s. per dozen. Good chrysanthemum flowers are also dearer. Carnations are much in demand. Good roses sell well, but the large quantities now imported from France affect the sale of smaller blooms. The variety Saffrano from France has been very good and abundant. Some of these flowers have been selling in the streets, three good blooms on long stems for a penny. Violets have been equally plentiful and cheap. Eucharis has been plentiful; the flowers seem to have come in rather too early. The prices of lily of the valley do not fluctuate greatly. Camellias, gardenias and tuberose are plentiful.

EASTER LILIES.

Will someone please inform me when Harrisii lilies that are now fine, strong plants, but kept in 50 degrees night temperature, should be moved to 60 degrees to bring them in for Easter? K.

If K had told us how high or how forward these "fine, strong plants" were at the present time we might speak more definitely about temperature. They may be fine and strong and only six inches above the pot, or they may be eighteen inches high. If the former, then they may be kept at 55 degrees at night till early February and then moved into 60 degrees, but if by early February you can just discern the buds forming in the crown of leaves you will not want to give them any more heat. As very recently said in these columns, you can't bring all these Harrisii lilies in at Easter without considerable moving. Some individual plants will want a higher temperature than others. By the middle of February you will be able to tell which plants will need more heat than others. If you can see the buds plainly, so that you can count them six weeks before Easter, you will be safe without any great forcing. W. S.

LONGIFLORUM LILIES.

I have some longiflorum lilies in cold storage that I want to flower during June. When should they be potted and at what temperature should they be kept after growth commences? L. N.

If bench room was of no great importance to you, then it would be best to pot these lilies at once and keep them in a very cool house, say 40 degrees at night, or even beneath a bench where there is not too much drip would do very well for a month. It is better for the bulb to be in the soil and slowly making roots, than it is to be in cold storage. Although for July, August and September flowering we have had very satisfactory results from bulbs kept in cold storage till May or June. June flowering is not late and if started at once and brought along very cool they would not be in flower before June. If space is of great importance to you, then you can defer starting them till the middle of March, but then you will have to give them a brisk heat both day and night during April and May.

This may be some guide: A few years ago we received 2,000 Japan bulbs too late for Easter, or we then thought so. We left them in cold frames in 5-inch pots till after New Year's, then kept them in a cool house, 40 degrees to 45 degrees at night. With the natural increase of heat and sun as the season advanced they came in just precisely right for Memorial day the last of May.

W. S.

and, after a good soaking, to lay them on their sides and cover with four or five inches of earth and later a few inches of straw or litter to keep severe freezing out. I trust you will have little difficulty in getting them out and you will find the wood and the eyes plump, more so than if you had stood them up in a cold frame. The middle of the month is time to start them and, as far as temperature, spraying, etc., the treatment needed is just the same as with the Ramblers lifted from the ground. There are no active roots and, therefore, they must start slowly.

Cutting Back Important.

The cutting down is a very important point. If cut too high you will have only the top eyes to break, with six or seven inches of bare stem. If cut too low the eyes at the base of the growths may come blind and then, as a pot plant, your labor is in vain. It's difficult to teach without having a plant before you. I would say leave three or four good, plump eyes on each growth, cutting out the weak growths entirely. If these rose plants were budded high it is almost impossible to get root and stem into a 6-inch pot and make a presentable plant. That is why all roses planted for this purpose in the spring should be low budded, so that when severely cut down at planting time the young growths start almost at the surface of the ground.

The nearer you can finish these roses to 55 degrees the stouter and better in color in leaf and flower will they be, and better value to your customer. When Easter comes a Crimson Rambler may be in fullest bloom and please all the better. What is coming won't be questioned, but with a hybrid perpetual they are so familiar to all that two expanded flowers and seven or eight buds to open will please far better than one with four open flowers and the rest ready to shed their petals. WILLIAM SCOTT.

EARLY MUMS.

For some years I have grown two houses 18 x 100 in early mums; by early I mean being all cut by October 26. This season I planted Pacific, Polly Rose, October Sunshine and Robinson. These I consider good commercial mums, but I would like two or three more sorts to come in about the same time. I have tried such standard sorts as Monrovia, Bergmann, Willowbrook, Lady Harriet, etc., but for different reasons have given them up. I would be glad to hear any suggestions in reference to same. H. D. D.

If H. D. D. has not already tried Mrs. Coombes and Alice Byron, I would add them to my list of standard varieties to grow for early cutting. Prices for the past two years have been very poor for October mums, but if he perseveres H. D. D. may reap a good harvest yet, for when we happen to get a killing frost early in October the mum is needed and badly, too, to fill up the sudden blank caused by the removal of the outside stock from the market. I think he will find Byron a much more satisfactory white to handle than Robinson, for it does not spot and if the bud is taken early in August the flower can be cut in fine shape early in October. A novelty of last year, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, brought me good money the first week in October and H. D. D. would not be far wrong

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Starting the Easter Roses.

Last week I spoke of Easter roses soon needing attention. The most important of these are the Crimson Rambler and hybrid perpetuals. It is of no use now to mention the varieties of the hybrids best suited for forcing, as you have them already.

To begin with the Ramblers. Perhaps the largest growers of these lift them from the field about the middle of November and keep them in a cool, shaded house or shed, with frequent syringing, so that the canes do not shrivel nor are the eyes injured. They slowly get hold of the soil and will now bear a little more heat and the fullest light. Perhaps about 45 degrees at night would be a good temperature till the leaf buds are ready to break, then 50 degrees at night for some weeks, finishing off with 55 degrees at night. I am certain that if you can develop their beautiful trusses of bloom in 55 degrees you will have a much deeper, finer color to the flower than if done in 65 degrees. Spraying the foliage on every bright day till the flowers are out should be done. It helps them to break into growth, keeps down red spider and produces an atmosphere congenial to a healthy growth.

Ramblers Grown in Pots.

Plants that were grown in pots last summer and have made three or four good canes and have been resting in a cold frame since the first of November will make the most satisfactory plants and will do it with little trouble and no risk of their coming blind. They will force in less time than the lifted plants if you choose, because they have active roots undisturbed. Still they are better given plenty of time and the middle of the month is late enough. Start them slowly and increase the heat as they need it. These plants, grown all summer in pots, will have about used up the soil, so take off an inch of the surface and replace with two inches of not over-decayed cow manure.

I think every one prefers a Rambler rose that is not over-tall, but one that is clothed with foliage and some flowers from bottom to top. Three or four stakes three feet long and pushed into the soil of a 7 or 8-inch pot will enable you to tie the canes spirally around these stakes and make a far more attractive plant than one having only flowers three feet from the pot.

Mildew on Ramblers.

Mildew often attacks the Ramblers. It was quite bad outdoors last summer, on plants that were growing vigorously in the open ground. That could be accounted for by a few scorching days in July, then a night of cold rain and the temperature down to 43 degrees on July 20. How is that for a subtropical climate? Under glass it can be avoided.

But there are several causes for mildew, any one of which will account for it. Letting the plants get dry at the root, dry to the wilting condition, will bring on mildew, but the most fruitful cause is a serious fluctuation of temperature. A week of bright sun in March, the temperature of the house 80 degrees and during the night 60 degrees, and then through carelessness or bad luck (?) a drop to 45 degrees some night, and you have mildew. Ventilators left open an hour too long and a chill settles on the plants which will "fix" them. The cooler or rather more moderate the temperature the less fear of mildew.

Dorothy Perkins.

I hope you have some Dorothy Perkins to force along with your Crimson Ramblers. It wants just about the same time and treatment and the few we had last year were quickly picked up. It's a beautiful pink. The truss of bloom may not be quite so large, but the single flower is as large as Crimson Rambler. The habit of the plant is fine and the small, dense, bright green foliage makes it most attractive.

Hybrid Perpetuals.

Few hybrid perpetual roses are grown in pots the previous summer for Easter blooming, for there is no need of it, they do so well lifted in the fall. It's quite a different case from the Ramblers. On them you retain all the wood; on the hybrid perpetuals you cut off at least two-thirds of the previous summer's growth and they have comparatively only a few eyes to support and roots are made as fast as the top growth progresses.

I said last November to pot these roses in getting a stock of it. If he can stand the price there are three varieties in the novelty list of this year that I would recommend him to try, and these are W. Duckham, Donald McLeod and Harrison Dick. They are all October bloomers and I can assure him that he will find them all right in habit, vigor and every other point.

LORRAINE BEGONIAS.

From nearly every section of the country the report is that the most popular Christmas plant is the Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. In general the culture of this plant, after the propagating stage, so well understood that the stock offered was of very good quality, but few have had better success than has A. Jablonsky, whose establishment is at Wellston, just outside of St. Louis. The accompanying illustration shows some of Mr. Jablonsky's shapely plants.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.

Will you please give us instructions as to propagating Begonia Gloire de Lorraine: How to treat the stock plants from now on; when to make the cuttings; what kind of growth to use, and other details. This begonia has sold so well this season that we wish to greatly increase our stock.

F. M.

Although of late quite successful with this charming plant I most fully realize that there are many readers more capable of answering the above, which includes nearly all there is to be known on the subject. This begonia is a hybrid. It is semi-tuberous-rooted, not deciduous, yet it wants a rest and after flowering for the large plants is the time to give them the rest.

Supposing you have some plants in 4, 5 or 6-inch pots unsold, in a few weeks the flowers will be about gone. Then, without cutting the plant down in any way, but merely pinching off the old flower stalks, remove the plants to a cool, light bench. Keep them rather on the dry side and the temperature about 45 degrees at night. This is the rest they require and it is enough.

At the end of April or in early May they may show signs of sending up growths from the root and if they do not it is time to take off a very little of the old soil, without any loss of roots, giving them one size larger pot than they were in. With a little fire heat and the natural light and warmth of the season they should make many stout, young growths from the base of the plant. These, taken off, root readily in sand and from the day they are rooted should be kept growing.

The conditions that suit them in July, August and the fall months are very well understood and it is in September and October that they do their fastest and best growing. In the hot summer months shade from bright sun, with no shade on dull days, early morning or late afternoon. Give plenty of ventilation in the house. And when once they are in 4-inch pots it pays to raise them on an inverted pot so that there is a free circulation of air all around them and their branches are not crowded. A well rotted sod with a third of leaf mold will do for soil and wet the foliage as little as possible when watering.

Many of these begonias are propagated from the leaf in September and October.

Lorraine Begonias Grown by A. Jablonsky, Wellston, Mo.

The leaf stalk with leaf attached is inserted in sand, or sifted coal ashes seem to do just as well. From the bottom of the leaf stem a tuft of roots will form and several growths start. Cuttings from the growths of larger plants are also made in the fall months and if you can get either of this class of cuttings to make small plants in 2 or 2½-inch pots by New Year's you can then give them a rest for a few months on some light, airy bench or shelf, just as you would the older and larger plants. These fall struck cuttings, if you get them to start growing freely in May will, of course, make larger plants by the following December than those put into the sand in June and July, but we have sometimes found these little plants slow to start. The young, stout, vigorous growth which starts from the rested plant in May makes a sufficiently large plant, and don't get impatient about their growth in the summer months. It is wonderful the growth these begonias make in October and November.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Treatment of Young Stock.

Cuttings as soon as rooted need the best of attention and the question is how shall the young stock be taken care of without occupying too valuable space, at the same time preserving its health and, I might add, strengthening its constitution.

Did you ever stop to think how little rest, if any, our carnations get? This is contrary to the laws of health and is the main reason of varieties running out or weakened to such extent as to become an easy prey to disease. As to space young stock takes up, it may be said that too often it has to be content with such as is thought good enough for plants that are giving no immediate returns, which is another violation of health laws, and these two matters have so much in common that by studying the carnation's needs along these lines we shall learn the secret of maintaining vigor in our plants.

Good Quarters Necessary.

Of course a house set apart for young stock would be an ideal plan, but with many this is out of the question; but I wish to lay particular stress on the importance of giving it congenial quarters. This means a bench which receives the full benefit of the sun and so situated that abundant ventilation can be given, so really when considering value of space the only feature not needed is head room. Do not attempt to stand them along the edge of a bench occupied by blooming plants or under the benches close to the paths, for they will surely suffer. Get them up where a sharp glance can be given them every time you pass by.

As I have said before in these notes, fresh soil containing no manure or bone is the best medium in which to put cuttings as they come from the sand, for common sense will tell that plants at rest or partially so are not in need of much food, and that little should be of a simple nature.

Handling the Cuttings.

Whether you pot the cuttings as rooted and later put into flats, or prick into flats and pot a short time before planting out, is a question your judgment must decide, taking as a guide the time of propagation and the peculiarities of each variety. Then, too, the quality of bloom demanded by your market may be a factor in deciding the course to pursue, but it has been proven to be a paying investment to pot every plant at some time between propagation and planting in the field.

As the cuttings come from the sand it is obvious that they cannot stand strong draughts or sun; neither can the tender roots bear being put into cold, wet soil, nor should the stock be at once placed in the temperature which I will touch upon later.

A week or so out of draughts in a shaded house is preferable to covering with papers, which not only mats down the foliage but increases the tendency to softness. When sufficiently established to stand full sun without wilting, we come to the point where the real period of rest can begin.

I have told you how comfortable quarters and rest go hand in hand, pointed out why plain soil is to be desired, and now bring your attention to temperature, which, if under control, can be made to serve the means of restoring vitality to the plants.

Temperature.

The carnation is capable of enduring a very low temperature, and is, in fact, almost hardy and from this it is evident that nature intended it should spend a portion of the year at rest, and we can provide for this when the plants are small better than at any other time.

A temperature from 10 to 15 degrees lower than required for blooming plants will be found to suit them admirably, as will be seen by the appearance of the stock after a few weeks of this treatment. It will take on that sturdy look so dear to the eye of a grower, and when planted in the field will take hold more readily, grow more rapidly and maintain a more shapely habit than if grown in a higher temperature.

From the above it will be seen that the abundant ventilation before alluded to will play an important part in keeping the temperature at the desired point, and if you cannot plant out until May 1 a side bench having a ventilator opening out from it will be a good berth for them.

Perhaps you may have some well protected frames in which the mercury does not fall below 35 degrees, but let there be no guess work about it, as too low a temperature would be overdoing the matter.

First, last and all the time, keep clear of insect pests.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

DRYING OF FOLIAGE.

I have a bench of Guardian Angel carnations that have gone wrong. The foliage begins to dry up at the point of the leaves and continues until the entire leaf is dead. They have been doing this for about eight weeks. I was told that I had not been giving them water enough and for the past three weeks I have been keeping them a little in the wet. But it does not seem to help them. They are producing good flowers on good stems, but the foliage is a fright. What is the trouble and what shall I do? J. S.

I have often seen the disease you are troubled with and although I am unable to tell you exactly what it is, I know it well by sight. In fact, I have had it on Armazindy, from which variety Guardian Angel sported. I have grown Armazindy without losing a leaf and perhaps the very next season it would act just as you say your Guardian Angels are doing. I believe you will find it worse in a very light soil and also if they are kept very dry at times. Also if they lack for want of food. I would begin with a sprinkling of wood ashes and in ten days follow it up with a liberal dose of soot. Mix the soot with fine sifted soil, about half and half. Cover the soil about one-fourth of an inch deep with this and water after it. I would remove all the dead leaves and burn them. You might also spray the plants with the copper and ammonia solution once each week. Cut all the blooms close before spraying it on. I would not propagate from this stock for next season's planting unless they grow entirely out of it at once. We have discarded Armazindy and all its sports, principally on account of this fault, but I know a few growers who claim that Armazindy is still their best money getter.

A. F. J. BAUR.

BACTERIOSIS AND FLY.

I enclose some branches of carnations infested with some kind of disease unknown to me. Some of my carnations come out all this way. Please let me know the nature of the trouble and the remedy. I keep the house between 50 and 65 degrees at night with hot water and have sulphur on the pipes all the time.

P. J. K.

The sample sent shows plainly that the plants are badly afflicted with bacteriosis. Some varieties are more susceptible to this disease than others, while on some you never see it. The worst ones I know of are McGowan, Flora Hill and Queen Louise. It is usually brought on by what we might term a sour stomach. Too much manure, too heavy soil or too much water. Any or all of these will bring it on and each should be carefully avoided. It always shows most during midwinter, when the weather is dark, but as spring comes on it gradually disappears and during the summer you will not find a trace of it. I would give them a sprinkling of wood ashes and soot alternately, one each week.

I also notice quite a number of greenfly on the specimens sent. Sometimes when these are allowed to get too numerous they will cause the growth to come with those yellow spots. Get rid of them at once by fumigating with tobacco in some form.

From 50 to 65 degrees is too much latitude for a night temperature; 50 to 55 degrees is about right and the closer you can keep it to one figure the better your plants will be. The temperature should never exceed 55 degrees at night.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Work of Committees.

John Burton, exhibited by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., at Chicago, December 16, 1903, color Daybreak pink, Japanese incurved, scored commercial scale, 87 points.

The chairman of the Chicago committee reported that "in judging this chrysanthemum the committee did not take into consideration the lateness of the variety, merely judging it on its merits. If we had considered the lateness and importance to the trade, it would undoubtedly have scored at least 90."

FRED H. LEMON, Sec'y.

THE LATE E. G. ASMUS.

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the New York Cut Flower Co., held at its office on Tuesday, December 29, 1903, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Ernst G. Asmus, our friend, counsellor and the first president of our organization, has been called from us by death, leaving a void which to us, seems one that cannot be filled, and

WHEREAS, We, who have been associated with him in this organization, feel that it is but proper that we place on record our estimate of his character and worth, and the sincere sorrow which each feels at parting with such a dear friend, able associate, and worthy collaborer, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the members of the board of directors of the New York Cut Flower Co. do hereby extend to the family their sincere sympathy at this bereavement, assuring them that by his death not only are we made mutually mourners for one beloved and respected, but that
